

ANDREW CARNEGIE ORDERS HOOD RIVER APPLES FROM LOCAL FIRM

Apples Such as Andrew Carnegie Ordered.

Only the richest people in the world are able to purchase the best of Oregon apples with any degree of regularity. Andrew Carnegie, the former steel king, eats and enjoys them, as well as other men of millions.

Yesterday the Carnegie Steel company of Pittsburgh purchased 20 boxes of Oregon apples from a local grower. The fruit was specially packed in pasteboard boxes with alternate layers of Orley and Spitzberg apples. On the top and bottom of each layer of fruit excelsior was packed in order to insure them against possible injury. They were marked for officials of the big steel company and one box is said to be especially made up for Carnegie himself.

In this city the apples cost the Carnegie Steel company $4 a box of about 24 apples. The cost of getting them to Pittsburgh is $3.50 a box; the fruit thus showing a cost in the Smoky City of $7.50 a box. By the time they are delivered to the homes of the steel officials the apples will cost about 10 cents each.

The fruit so much prized by all America and Europe was grown at Hood River. The Spitzberg is well known all over the world as a variety that grows better in Oregon than any other place. The Orley is not so well known, but is of such quality that it rivals, if it does not excel, the famous "Spitz" in quality. The Orley apple is very similar in appearance to the Bellflower and has a taste peculiarly its own. It is of light yellow color.

Mr. Goodwin of the F. Dresser company, who sold the apples, says that orders for Oregon apples come from all parts of the world and price is seldom specified. "Send us your best apples," is what they generally say, says Mr. Goodwin.

EXPRESS DRIVER MAY HAVE SHOT HIMSELF

Mystery Surrounds Details of Alleged Holdup of a Great Northern Employee.

Spokane, Wash., Dec. 20.—Following the report of three revolver shots in quick succession, crowds rushed into the alley in the rear of the Great Northern express office at about 6:10 last evening to find Wesley Eichelberger suffering from a flesh wound in the hip, which he said had been inflicted by a highwayman who attempted to hold him up. Eichelberger is a driver for the Great Northern Express company, and according to his story he had just arrived from the depot with the express which contained several packages of money. He said that the highwayman pressed his gun against him and commanded him to throw up his hands, but he refused to do so and drawing his own revolver fired three shots at the driver in the hip. All who heard the shots agree that three were fired, but when Eichelberger's revolver was examined it was discovered that it contained three empty shells. The police are mystified and inclined to believe that Eichelberger's wound is self-inflicted, although they are unable to suggest a reasonable theory why he should have shot himself and will continue their investigations.
