THE TWO BIG MARKETS

GOVERNMENT INSPECTION IS A CERTIFICATE TO GOOD HEALTH

When you buy Government-inspected meats, you take out just so much health insurance—yet there is no premium on the policy; you pay just the price of good meat. Government inspection means that the cattle are healthy and that you are getting good, clean, wholesome, nourishing meat.

Oregon peaches are in the market and are selling at 10 cents each. If you want three of them you can get them for 25 cents and a dozen for 90 cents. People that are in the habit of buying them by the box will have to get a larger purse than usual for that amount will cost nearly $5. A few weeks ago they could be easily purchased in the markets for about one fifth of that value. The peaches are in very good shape. They were sent from this city by a local wholesaler and put into cold storage in Los Angeles. There they were very carefully attended to and yesterday were received back in Portland in just as good condition as they left several weeks previous.
Pineapples are very plentiful in the retail markets and are in better shape than usual at this time of the year. Almost an entire cargo was brought over from Honolulu the other day by a steamer. In the retail markets they are selling at 40, 50 and 60 cents each, according to size. Some received from Mexico of smaller size may be obtained for less but they do not have the quality of the Hawaiian fruit.

On Christmas day you can serve strawberries to your guests but they will cost you more money than usual. On Tuesday morning a shipment will be received in this city from southern California which are expected to be of very good quality considering that they are not raised in Oregon. At retail the price is 40 and 50 cents a one-pound box, according to quality.

Oranges of large size are rather scarce in the markets this year for the reason that southern California fruit did not ripen early enough to make general shipments to the outside. Practically all the oranges now in the retail markets are from Northern California and what they lack in size, more than make up in quality. They're sweet, say the dealers. Price in the markets will range between 25 and 50 cents a dozen.
The markets still have quite fair supplies of grapes. Some from Spain are especially good. These are packed in large barrels and cork dust is placed between each cluster to get it in proper condition. Some from California are in good shape and are not so high either.

The price of turkeys in the retail markets will range between 15 and 25 cents a pound for the dressed article. The higher price will be charged for extra selected birds but good ones may be obtained at 20 cents. Chickens will not be so high and those that cannot afford a turkey will be able to take two of these home for Christmas dinner.
Milder weather has brought down the price of eggs a trifle and the dealers look for still further drops during the next few days. More fresh Oregon eggs were received during the past day or so than for the entire previous week.
Butter remains very high but there is still considerable hope that the larger supplies will force the values down. Supplies of cranberries are quite good and those that were compelled to forego cranberry sauce for their Thanksgiving bird will be able to secure all they need for Christmas. The price is no higher.

All sorts of nuts are very high this year on account of the short crop in California and the very heavy demand. None can be obtained under 25 cents a pound, while some varieties are selling as high as 40 cents.

The candy factories have been working overtime during the past few days in order to fully supply your wants for the Christmas dinner—or perhaps for the young one's stocking. While prices in most lines have advanced candies will cost you no more this year than usual.

There is an extreme shortage in the supply of canned eastern oysters and for this reason if you want oysters you had better order early. The Pacific coast supplies, while short, are still plentiful enough to supply your wants. They're just a fraction higher than the prices you paid a year ago.

The fish markets show an extreme scarcity in most lines. There is plenty of salmon to meet all the requirements for the holiday dinner but other lines are high. Better place your order early or you'll get left.
