EVELYN THAW ADMITS WRITING WHITE LETTERS

Admission Draws Harry Thaw Half Out of Chair to Search Wife's Face.

MISSIVE PENNED AFTER TELLING THAW HER STORY

Young Woman Makes Replies Freely and Without Hesitation to Jerome's Searching Questions About Her Past Career.

(Journal Special Service.)
New York, Feb. 20.—Under the first sting of Jerome's cross-examination Evelyn Nesbit Thaw made an admission just before court adjourned last night that drew Harry Thaw half out of his chair to search anxiously the face of his pretty young wife. She admitted to Jerome that a few weeks after that fateful interview with Thaw in Paris, that nerve-racking conversation which lasted through the night in which she told Thaw as her reason for refusing his offer of marriage of the indignities to which she had been subjected by Stanford White, she had written two letters to White from Boulogne. Thaw's face paled at the revelation, he locked his hands together convulsively, and seemed about to rise and then there beseech a full explanation. At that point Jerome abruptly ended his examination for the day. And yet, though the district attorney grimly smiled his satisfaction over the replies that his questions had brought out, young Mrs. Thaw gave them so freely and so simply and with such a readiness that there is more than a probability that the harassed young woman has a full explanation which her husband's eyes begged, which will be forthcoming at the proper time.

Cross-Examination Sudden.
The beginning of the cross-examination came so suddenly that the spectators were scarcely aware of the trend of events when Jerome had opened fire. The proceedings had dragged; there had been long, scintillating disputes photographed or painted with her breast exposed. She answered positively, never. Jerome repeated the question. Evelyn replied that she was certain she never posed with her breast among counsel as to understandings and agreements, Jerome fighting for delay, Delmas seeking the advantage of forcing his adversary, taken at a disadvantage, to fight.

Through it all little Mrs. Thaw sat listlessly in the witness-chair, seemingly little caring how the game of battle went. She had had a long and wearisome day on the stand, going over once more the details of the evil doings of Stanford White as they had thrown their shadow over her life and that of the prisoner at the bar. Her hands lay limp in her lap, her face was pale, her eyes red-rimmed from lack of sleep and tears. Then suddenly Justice Fitzgerald ruled against Jerome and forced him to undertake the cross-examination at once.

Forced to Admit Letters.
Darkness had fallen and the chamber was aglow with yellow electric light as Jerome dragged her unwillingly through a mass of questions that have for their object to pin the witness down securely to statements previously made on direct examination. He read sections of her testimony, touched lightly upon her childhood, upon her life in Philadelphia, upon her experience on the stage—leaping back and forth apparently, without cause or purpose—until at length he fixes her in Europe a few weeks after the conversation with Thaw in Paris, and then in a few direct questions secured the admissions at the close of the day. Mrs. Thaw, in a state of nervous collapse, went home in an automobile.

Ignorant of Divorce.
Jerome pressed Evelyn for the exact date of her downfall in White's studio, but she could not place it closer than to say it was the night following the day on which she posed for "Beauty and the Beast" a picture in which she was dressed in a kimono lying on a huge bearskin rug. Jerome questioned her closely regarding her knowledge of Lederer's divorce suit, but Evelyn said she knew nothing about it until she read of it in the newspapers.
"Did you, while in Boulogne, after the defendant proposed, write letters to any person in America?"
"Yes."
"To whom?"
"To whom? One, perhaps two letters, to White."
"This after Thaw's proposal?"
"Yes."

exposed. She added, "I always posed with my clothes on."
Then followed a discussion as to the first publication of a likeness which appeared in a magazine in 1901.

Jerome took up a line of examination concerning 14 letters written to Evelyn by Stanford White while she was abroad in 1902. These letters are now in possession of Thaw's attorneys.
When Jerome asked her as to the presence in these letters of indecent and improper matter Evelyn said she did not remember much about them.

Key Relations with Garland.
At 11:40 the prosecutor began his cross-examination upon the story of her ruin. He tried to make her admit discrepancies as to the time of night when it was accomplished.

Jerome asked Evelyn about her relations with James A. Garland, who was seeking a divorce in the spring of 1905, several months before Evelyn met White. She admitted she and her mother had spent many Sundays on Garland's private yacht. Jerome posed himself from a statement by Evelyn's mother, which he held in his hand.
Evelyn said her friendship with Garland continued until she met White, when it ceased abruptly.

Evelyn told Jerome her relations with her mother were always pleasant up to the time of their quarrel. She said, with a startled manner, replying to questions, that she had no reason to believe her mother would sacrifice her for money. She thought if she was the victim of her mother's indiscretions it was only a matter of misjudgment.
Jerome tried by every means to pick flaws in Evelyn's testimony previously given. He unearthed apparent cases where two statements conflicted, but the witness was always ready with an explanation and could not be tripped.

Jerome asked if her mother called for her in the Garland divorce, but upon Delmas' objection he withdrew the question.
Howard Nesbit's Hostility.
The tangible evidence that Howard Nesbit, Evelyn's brother, was assisting the prosecution came out next. Jerome reverted to the time when Evelyn was a member of the "Florodora" company and asked if her mother called for her at the theatre. She said she did, every night. Jerome asked if her brother ever called for her. Evelyn said once, when her mother was sick. Jerome asked if she could identify it as her brother's handwriting. She did so.

Without questioning her, Jerome suddenly asked for an adjournment, which was taken until 2 o'clock.
Evelyn left the chair much relieved. She glanced toward her husband and received a look of approval telling her she had acquitted herself well. This made her smile and almost skip from the room.

JEWEL BOX STOLEN

In default of which he was locked up in a cell.
According to his story he has been residing at the Carlton for five months and three nights weekly he acts as a night clerk of the hotel. Some time last week, the exact date he does not remember, while showing a prospective roomer around the hotel, found the casket in one of the vacant apartments. Meyer says that none of the valuables reported missing were in the chest with the exception of the snake ring, the small diamond and a piece of gold.

Attributed by his find, the youth says he showed the casket and contents to a Mr. Martin employed at Feldeneimer's jewelry store. Believing that the ring was worthless Meyer says he threw it away, along with the rest of the articles and gave the chest to Martin, who wanted to use it as a cigar case.
Martin is being sought by the detectives and may be able to satisfy the officers that he did not have a hand in the theft.

Meyer, upon learning yesterday that the Ellys had missed the chest from their apartments, went to his room and took the jewel-cases to his own, saying that he had had them several days ago in the hall. He told several conflicting stories regarding his possession of the case, and the police are satisfied that he is not telling the truth. His explanation of disposing of the ring by throwing it into the street is regarded as a myth, and an effort will be made to induce him to reveal the hiding-place of the other articles.
If the jewelry is returned it is not probable that the boy will be prosecuted, as it is believed that his arrest will be a sufficient lesson. This is his first offense of the kind so far as known.

SCHOOL TEACHER and Coffee Drinking

Many good people are loth to give up coffee, even though they admit that it is doing them harm, because they fear that nothing else in the way of a hot beverage will satisfy them. A school teacher says:

"I always enjoyed coffee for breakfast. The day seemed lost without it. But in time I began to experience bad results from its use. I grew very nervous and lost flesh and finally was prostrated by a complete nervous breakdown. Then I was compelled to abandon the use of coffee.

"I adopted Postum Food Coffee as my hot beverage at breakfast. Have been using it for more than two years. My health is restored and I am able to take an interest in life once more."
"My whole family, children and all, drink Postum Food Coffee, and we all thrive and keep healthy on it. It is to us a delightful drink, delicious and tempting and with none of the harmful effects that usually followed the use of coffee. The choicest brands of Java and Mocha offered free would not tempt us to quit the use of Postum Food Coffee."

PERUNA EDITORIAL NO. 2.

In our last editorial on Feruna, after showing that this well-known family medicine is no longer a secret remedy, but prints on the label of the bottle the principal active ingredients, we made the statement that FERUNA IS AN EXCELLENT CATARRH REMEDY.

The question now arises whether we are claiming for Feruna more than the facts warrant. Have we abundant proof that Feruna is in reality a catarrh remedy? Have we proof of this fact so well established that even the critics of Feruna must admit the force of our evidence?

Our task will be an easy one to show what eminent authorities think of the ingredients which compose Feruna.

Take, for instance, the ingredient HYDRASTIS CANADENSIS, OR GOLDEN SEAL. The United States Dispensatory says of this herbal remedy, that it is largely employed in the treatment of depraved mucous membranes, chronic rhinitis (nasal catarrh), atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), chronic intestinal catarrh, catarrhal jaundice (catarrh of the liver), and in diseased mucous membranes of the pelvic organs. It is also recommended for the treatment of various forms of diseases peculiar to women.

Another ingredient of Feruna, CORYDALIS FORMOSA, is classed in the United States Dispensatory as a tonic.

CEDRON SEEDS is another ingredient of Feruna, an excellent drug that has been very largely overlooked by the medical profession for the past fifty years. THE SEEDS ARE TO BE FOUND IN VERY FEW DRUG STORES. The United States Dispensatory says of the action of cedron that it is used as a bitter tonic and in the treatment of dysentery, and in intermittent diseases as a SUBSTITUTE FOR QUININE.

OIL OF COPAIBA, another ingredient of Feruna, is classed by the United States Dispensatory as a mild stimulant and diuretic. It acts on the stomach and intestinal tract. It acts as a stimulant on the genito-urinary membranes. Useful in chronic cystitis, chronic dysentery and diarrhea, and some chronic diseases of the liver and kidneys.

THE EMINENT AUTHORITY ON THERAPEUTICS, BARTHOLOW, in speaking of these same ingredients of Feruna is even more enthusiastic as to their medicinal merit.

OF HYDRASTIS, HE SAYS it is applicable to stomatitis (catarrh of the mucous surfaces of the mouth), follicular pharyngitis (catarrh of the pharynx), chronic coryza (catarrh of the head). This writer classes hydrastis as a stomachic tonic, useful in atonic dyspepsia (chronic gastric catarrh), catarrh of the duodenum, catarrh of the gall duct, catarrh of the intestines, catarrh of the kidneys (chronic Bright's disease), catarrh of the bladder, and catarrh of other pelvic organs.

BARTHOLOW REGARDS COPAIBA as an excellent remedy for chronic catarrh of the bladder, chronic bronchitis (catarrh of the bronchial tubes).

BARTHOLOW STATES THAT CUBER, an ingredient of Feruna, promotes the appetite and digestion, increases the circulation of the blood. Useful in chronic nasal catarrh, follicular pharyngitis (catarrh of the pharynx), increasing the toxicity of the mucous membranes of the throat. It also relieves hoarseness. Useful in atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), and in chronic catarrh of the colon and rectum, catarrh of the bladder, prostaticorrhea, and chronic bronchial affections.

MILLSAUGH, MEDICINAL PLANTS, one of the most authoritative works on medicinal herbs in the English language, in commenting upon COLLINSIONIA CANADENSIS, says that it acts on the pneumogastric and vaso motor nerves. It increases the secretions of the mucous membranes in general. In the mountains of Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Carolina, collinsionia canadensis is considered a panacea for many disorders, including headache, colic, cramp, dropsy and indigestion. DR. SCUDDER regards it highly as a remedy in chronic diseases of the lungs, heart disease and asthma.

These citations ought to be sufficient to show to any candid mind that Feruna is a catarrh remedy. Surely, such herbal remedies that command the enthusiastic confidence of the highest authorities obtainable, brought together in proper combination, ought to make a catarrh remedy of the highest efficacy.

This is exactly what we claim for Feruna. We claim no more than the best authorities willingly admit. It is useless for envious doctors or hostile critics to attempt to set aside such proof.

Some of these ingredients are not in common use. Some of them are difficult to obtain, and still more difficult to combine into a stable and palatable compound. They have been, therefore, neglected by the medical profession, largely, for remedies that are easier to obtain and more convenient to dispense.

Feruna is a catarrh remedy that has been in the field for many years. OTHER CATARRH REMEDIES HAVE COME AND GONE, but the reputation of Feruna has outlived them all.

Feruna is a combination of efficient herbal remedies that yields a powerful influence on all the mucous membranes of the body, and hence reaches catarrh wherever it is located.

This is our claim, and we are able to substantiate this claim by ample quotations from the HIGHEST MEDICAL AUTHORITIES IN THE WORLD.
