

PROSECUTOR RELENTLESS

Jerome attempted to shake the testimony of the weakened and nerve-racked woman who sat before him, unflinching, but with voice that trembled in answer to the attack with which the prosecutor sought to tear down her structure for the defense.

Woman Leaves Room.

Jerome elicited from the witness details that caused women newspaper writers to leave the court. He drove at her questions which brought on a complete breakdown, brought sobs to her lips which shook her body with an agony of remorse and sorrow.

Jerome, continuing his cross-examination of Evelyn, put the case through the ordeal of the gift of the tenderloin, and the muck brought from the lips of the youthful girl is a story surpassing in lascivious detail anything ever before told of public record.

Frequently Wept on Stand.

Delmas, objecting to what appeared to him a sneer on the prosecutor's lips, protested. Jerome, prosecutor of criminals for years, prosecutor of tenderloin victims, rich and poor, men and women, Jerome, whose knowledge of the criminal world is the greatest of perhaps any public official, said:

"If the story is true, I could not sneer. I never heard his equal."

Evelyn's story today, unprepared as the one when her own attorney drew her out, was more than she could stand. Frequently she broke into tears and her voice trembled as she told her shame. Jerome in a relentless way brought in details the defense little suspected he knew, at the most unexpected places. This he did without desire to add to the woman's shame, but to secure the ends of justice.

The trial room filled rapidly today. Evelyn's appearance didn't indicate that she had any great fear of awaiting the ordeal. Gained in courage by his success Wednesday Jerome proceeded at the lawyers and entered the room smilingly confident.

Thaw entered carrying a bunch of newspaper clippings of the previous day's proceedings. For the first time since his arrest he called the newspaper men to discuss the case, but merely protested against the article in this morning's paper commenting on Evelyn's forgetfulness.

Evelyn Called to Stand.

"It's not exactly just to her, you know," he said. "She had little to do with drawing those funds from the Trust company."

After a brief consultation between the attorneys on both sides with the court, it was announced the court would adjourn this afternoon until after Washington's birthday. The trial probably will not be resumed before Monday. Evelyn was called to the stand after the conference. She appeared in the same blue dress, her face slightly paler, hair somewhat tousled, her voice stronger, and her replies more certain. Jerome read the record of the examination of the letter yesterday to the effect that Evelyn believed all women had until she was eighteen and a half years old, and until she talked with Thaw after refusing him on account of her "unworthiness."

Did you ever hear of "Dead Rat," asked Jerome.

"Yes, it's a name in Paris." "Is it reputable?" "I do not know."

"Where you ever there?" "Yes. People were eating and drinking and dancing. The dance was Russian."

Thaw's Letters Introduced.

Jerome questioned Evelyn further about the case. Evelyn said she was sure there was only one Russian dance. "There may have been a cake walk then," Jerome showed he had obtained one of Thaw's letters from Paris. Witness said Shubert and another theatrical manager were with her and Thaw at the "Dead Rat." She believed some women were with Thaw after refusing him on account of her "unworthiness."

FASCINATING BATTLE WON

ator, who had hesitated a score of points for the defense. Jerome's conduct this morning was that of a prosecutor rather than a prosecutor, and largely defeated the ends sought. Time and again tears filled the eyes of the witness as she was forced to repeat the story of her downfall.

Most Fascinating Battle.

Jerome plodded patiently on, his cross-examination not concluded, the end not yet, but in the fighting that is yet to be done he must make vastly more material progress than he has heretofore. The story of the girl will go before the jury with crushing and convincing strength.

Delmas Objects to Sneer.

Delmas and Jerome got into a lively tilt over what Delmas described as a sneer in Jerome's tone as he questioned Evelyn as to what prompted Evelyn's renunciation of Thaw's love. Jerome explained:

"There is no sneer. It all depends on whether the story is true. If true there can be no sneer, for I never heard his equal."

Jerome, resuming his examination, asked: "Was your reason for renouncing Thaw's proposal merely because of feeling that you were unworthy?"

"That was because I was found out," said Evelyn, changing tact from the day before, when she said it was because she was unworthy.

"Who told you you had been found out?" "White."

DEATH AND BURIAL OF MISS ALLIE CONNELL

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Hillsboro, Or., Feb. 21.—Miss Allie Connell, aged 23 years, died at Portland, California, Thursday, and the remains were brought here for burial Tuesday. She had lived with her father in this city several years and had been an invalid for two years past. About three months ago her father took her to California, thinking the change would be beneficial. She was a member of the Methodist church and also a member of the Royal Neighbors of America. The funeral service was held at the Methodist church here, with interment in the I. O. O. F. cemetery. The services were conducted by the Royal Neighbors. Her father and two brothers survive her.

The American ship C. B. Cheney is due to arrive at the mouth of the river to load lumber at St. Helens. She is 25 days out from San Francisco.
