STEINER AND

tendent and Other State Bank Examiner.

Dr. Steiner entered the race strongly supported by Secretary of State F. W. Benson. Steiner is a close political and personal friend of both Secretary of State F. W. Benson and of his brother. Judge Henry Benson, of Klamath Falls. Governor Chamberiain took a neutral stand, preferring to allow the Republican majority of the board to settle its own disputes.

As a result of this condition there was a probability that no appointment would break the deadlock and that Superintendent Calbreath would hold office without appointment for another term.

Calbreath's Good Becord.

The reported selection of Mr. Steel for the position of bank examiner and of Dr. Steiner for superintendent of the asylum is a compromise between the two officials. It will retire Superintendent Calbreath at the end of eight years of service as the head of the largest of Oregon's state institutions. Dr. Calbreath, when he leaves the institution, will leave a record for good management which even those politically opposed to him admit has been excellent. During his incumbency the institution has grown in size until it is now the largest state institution under the management of the state board.

Dr. Steiner is a well-known physician of the Willamette valley, though yet comparatively a young man. He spent his boyhood and youth at Salem and later went to Klamath Falls, where he practiced his profession. He was elected to the house of representatives from there, his term of office expiring with the 1905 session. Calbreath's Good Bee

James Steel is well known to old-ne residents of Portland. He was the first cashier of the First National bank in this city, taking the position upon the organization of the bank May 1, 1866. He resigned some 16 years later to go into business for himself, having to go into business for himself, having leased a line of warehouses on the line of the old narrow gauge road now known as the Yamhill division of the Southern Pacific, and also on the Springfield branch of the Southern Pacific. The lines at the time were under the management of Henry Villard, and owing to the fact that the extensions are mixed by Villard were not made the ing to the fact that the extensions promised by Villard were not made the venture of Mr. Steel did not prove profitable and he sold out at a less.

Mr. Steel next assisted in the organisation of the Willamette Savings bank, which was afterward reorganized into the present Merchants' National bank of this city. 'He was president of this bank until he resigned in 1893 to commence the construction of the Oregon City electric line, the nucleus of the present Oregon Water Power system. He is at the present time the secretary of the Idaho Copper Mining company.

the new bank will be installed there by May 1. Richard Martin has drawn the plans for remodeling the interior and construction contracts have been let. The plan of the organizers is to have a list of 500 stockholders before the bank opens for business. Of these there will be 25 men selected as an advisory board, and a board of seven directors. The directors will choose three executive officers who will conduct the business of the bank.

Fortland is growing in population at the rate of nearly 20,000 people annually, and at this ratio it is estimated that a new banking house can be profitably started here every year. Last year witnessed the establishment of the Bankers' and Lumbermen's bank on the west side, and a new bank opened by Geo. W. Bates on the east side. In addition two or three trust companies have opened for business within the last eight months.
