The Market Basket

There is much controversy these days among consumers, packers and the United States government as to whether the sardines packed in the east are really what they profess to be, or are merely herring packed under a wrong name. For years it has been the custom of eastern packers to put up herring as sardines, but this practice may be terminated under the new pure foods law which compels packers to place the proper label on each package. The packers contend that the little fish which is packed so extensively along the Maine coast and elsewhere is a "herring," but when he is prepared in oil and canned he sells as a "sardine." As a matter of fact, however, it is a good question whether the fish is not in truth as much a sardine as any fish ever imported. According to Webster, a sardine is "any one of the several fish species of herring which are commonly preserved in oil for food, especially the pilchard or European sardine." Back a few years the department is reported to have decided that a sardine was merely a "little fish." Historically it is known that the only reason for the name "sardine" came from the fact that the little fish were fish packed by the fishermen of Sardinia. In fact, the fish as it swims the sea is practically the same fish on both sides of the world, and it is contended that it is as proper for Americans to call their herring a sardine as for the Frenchmen to do so. Fresh fish has been very scarce of late, but now that Lent is over and there is not so great a demand, it is quite likely that supplies will be improved. Some fresh salmon is now daily due from the Sacramento river in California, and it is only a short time before the season will again be opened on the Columbia river.

Sweet potatoes all the way from Jersey and egg-plant from Cuba are among the special features of the retail markets today. Egg plant has been in the market for several days and has been selling at $1 a pound. Sweet potatoes are retailing at two pounds for 25c. Burbank potatoes cost more money again and they are not likely to cheapen in price the remainder of the season. While there has been a drop in San Francisco owing to the shipment there all at once of heavy supplies, the market there will go to its former level as soon as these are cleaned up. It is now known to a certainty that there is not a sufficient amount of potatoes remaining in the state of Oregon to supply the demand for the rest of the season. Onions are higher in the retail markets owing to the scarcity of supplies. While the crop was a record-breaker the past season, but small stocks showed the keeping qualities for which the Oregon onion is noted. Thus at the start of the season growers could not get a living price for their stock, while at the close of the season, when they have no onions, the values advance rapidly.

All sorts of canned goods will be high the coming season. At this time there is every prospect that California will not produce her usual heavy crops and the shortage in cans and labor will put the cost well up to the present high figure.

On account of the floods in California which swept the islands of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers, the asparagus crop will be very small again and already prices are advanced sharply over the figures which were ruling a short time ago. Even at these higher figures canned asparagus is very hard to obtain. Fresh stock is coming into this market very slowly from California and the price in retail markets has advanced to 20c and 35c a pound, according to quality.

Vegetables of all kinds are very scarce in the markets. Several cars which arrived the other day from the south were in such bad condition that most of the stocks were dumped. They were held by the blockade too long.

Eggs are going down again with the larger supplies, but at the low point it is not expected that the market will remain a long period, for already the cold storage operators are getting ready to do their season's work.

Chickens are as scarce as ever and most of the supplies in the retail markets are from the east.

Butter is down in a roll, owing to the larger supplies of cream. Within the next few days another drop for about the same amount is expected.

Prayed and Smashed.
Great indignation has been felt in Berlin for some time past, owing to the progress of the doctrines of Christian Scientists. The objections have been intensified recently by an extraordinary case of religious mania which simultaneously attacked five members of the same family.

The mother was the first victim and after her in quick succession came two daughters and two grown up sons. The mania took the form of praying violently over the husband and father, who was sick ahead, the violence developing into a general fury and the destruction of all the fittings of their flat.

The husband and father was eventually rescued covered with blood. The rest of the family were only prevented
