

COURT ALLOWS TEN CHALLENGES

New Idaho Law Upheld by Judge Fremont Wood in the Trial of Haywood.

DARROW SEES SOUL OF WITNESSES ON STAND

Keen Attorney for Defense Has Almost Hypnotic Power in Forcing Truth From Candidates for Jury Duty in Famous Murder Case.

By George H. Shoaf.
(Staff Correspondent Appeal to Reason.)
Boise, Idaho, May 31.—When Judge Wood instructed counsel for the state to proceed with the exercise of their sixth peremptory challenge in the Haywood trial yesterday, Attorney Richardson of the defense, arose and submitted a formal objection to the procedure.

Attorney Richardson's remarks were made with considerable emphasis and indicated a depth of feeling that is a marked characteristic of every lawyer connected with this case. He objected to the state using the sixth challenge on the ground that the new law authorizing it is an ex post facto law and had no force at the time the crime charged against the defendant is alleged to have been committed. He further declared that if the challenge was allowed by the court the trial of Defendant Haywood would not then be conducted according to due process of law, but would be in defiance of the law and of the federal constitution which guarantees every citizen protection within certain limits.

At the conclusion of Richardson's remarks the court overruled the objections and ordered the prosecution to proceed. An exception was preserved.

Darrow's Hypnotic Power.
Questioning of witnesses by the defense continued with unabated fervor after the disposition of Richardson's objections. C. S. Darrow conducted the examination for the defense throughout the entire day, while W. E. Borah handled the situation for the state. Darrow's promiscuity to stand near the witness as he piled them with questions drew criticism from the court several times. The Chicago lawyer appeals more to the conscience of the juror under examination than to the intellect and in his effort to induce the juror to lay bare his exact state of mind and his attitude toward the defendant on trial he appears to resort to the hypnotic power of suggestion. A score of questions, delicate and leading, are put with a skill that is truly marvelous and in nearly every instance when Darrow is through, it is plain that he has got to the bottom of the juror's soul.

This method of Darrow's was vividly illustrated in his cross-examination of John Fisher, Juror No. 10. Fisher had been passed for cause Saturday, but owing to recent developments he was recalled again yesterday. In the examination Saturday Fisher denied that he ever talked with any one about the case at any time since the murder of Steunenberg. Today, Darrow, in his inimitable way, led Fisher into a maze of questions to a final admission that he did talk with some one somewhere last fall. Further questioning led Fisher to admit that the talk occurred in his orchard during the month of October last, and, finally, the juror made a clean breast of the situation and gave the name of the man with whom he had the talk.

Condemned Union Men.
When this point was reached the juror denied that he told the man that "Meyer, Haywood and Pettibone ought to have been strung up before they were brought to Idaho for having blown up the Independence depot," but later on in the course of the examination he admitted that he did use such language.

When C. E. Allen, the man with whom Fisher had the talk, was introduced to the court, he at first denied knowing him, but in a few moments his memory was clarified by Darrow and he recognized Allen perfectly. In the beginning of the examination Fisher asserted that his mind was free from bias for or against the Western Federation of Miners, but toward the close he said that he believed that the miners' union was responsible for many murders committed in Colorado and Idaho.

While Darrow led Juror Fisher to tell the truth and make plain his attitude toward Defendant Haywood his influence with the court did not appear to amount to much. His challenge, denied by the prosecution, was also denied by the court, and if the defense gets rid of Juror Fisher, who so openly declared his antagonism against the Western Federation of Miners in general and Haywood in particular, they will have to use a peremptory challenge.

John F. Whitlock was the last talent examined before adjournment of court at 4:30 o'clock.

ROOSEVELT IS NOT CANDIDATE

President Does Not Want Third Term Because He Feels Financial Panic.

(Washington Bureau of The Journal.)
Washington, May 31.—General Powell Clayton of Arkansas seems to have offered an argument why President Roosevelt will not accept a third term which has been adequate—the danger of a business depression during the ensuing six years, which would be within the time of his service where he re-elected in 1904.

Conservative observers do not take a lugubrious view of the financial situation when judging it from legitimate viewpoints. No reason for a severe depression appears today, nor is likely to for many years to come.

But, it is cited, recently there was a rich man's panic on the Wall street stock exchange, and there may be others of the same sort. Those who are wedded to the old methods of stock issues and manipulation might take it into their heads to visit punishment on the powers that be for interfering with their schemes and planning to put an end to their exploitation of the people's labor.

Such a contingency has been considered at the White House, and it is not probable that President Roosevelt will care to remain in office long enough to face the political consequences which would flow from the coming of a depression while he was president.

General Clayton recently gave an interview to the Gazette's Washington correspondent, in which he said that he believed Mr. Roosevelt really desired that someone else be the candidate of the Republican party next year; that he believed the president's reason for this was his fear lest there be business troubles and his reelection in 1908 by a lessened majority than he received in 1904, but that he also believed that the president would be "drafted as a candidate" against his will.
