

EDNA MAY IS MARRIED TO YOUNG MILLIONAIRE

Oscar Lewisohn Becomes Second Husband of the Famous Actress Who Won London as a Salvation Lassie in "The Belle of New York."

Edna May-Lewisohn.

(Journal Special Service.) London, June 4.—Edna May and Oscar Lewisohn were married here today. No stage celebrity of recent years has had a more romantic career than Edna May. Born in humble circumstances, unrecognized among the members of the chorus when she first essayed the stage as a career, taking London suddenly by storm after New York had failed to see anything out of the usual rut in her performance of a minor part, and now the bride of the owner of millions, after divorcing a former husband who was a famous bicycle rider—that is the history of Edna May's life in one sentence.

Miss May's name when she was a secure and unknown little chorus girl in New York was Edna May Petty. She was born in Syracuse, New York, where her father was a letter carrier. When she went on the stage she was glad to get a salary of $12 a week. A few years later she signed contracts for $500 and $1,000 a week, and had scores of suitors from rajahs of India to heirs of British dukedoms, from the chappies of Piccadilly to bank clerks of Threadneedle street. At least one man had committed suicide because of her, and she has had a house in Regent street, a villa in St. John's Wood, and an estate in Scotland.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you. Here is local evidence to prove it:

Mrs. D. Murphy of 395 Iyon street, Portland, Oregon, says: "Since 1902, when I gave a statement recommending Doan's Kidney Pills after I had found great benefit through their use I have had some further occasions to test the remedy and it has always given satisfaction. My original experience with them was in a bad case of kidney complaint and backache. From my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills I am ready to recommend them just as strongly as I did three years ago."

Mother and Child.

Sometimes mothers feel that they do not fully answer the childish demand for companionship, and though their wish may be sincere enough, they are conscious that the eager baby mind needs more than they are giving of the romance of fairy lore and the close bond which draws the child to nature. Let such a mother not lose heart, for it only requires a little patience with one's self to grow into the child's world and be able to see with his eyes. Such books are helpful as "The Fairy Land of Science," and "Sea-side and Wayside." Not to read to the young child, of course, for his stories must come at first hand to be interesting to him, but the mother by such reading may come to a fuller appreciation of the needs of the child's mind and be able to find groundwork for her own imagination.

It is beautiful to see the world through the eyes of a child. So one gets absolutely original impressions and the mother is losing much of the sweetness of the child's earliest years who has not cultivated this point of view both for her own sake and for his. Everything is interesting to the little philosopher who is trying to find out what kind of a world this is that he has tumbled into, and a morning's walk with a child who has not been cowed into servile conformity through the mistaken notion of some unwise trainer is a series of fresh, vigorous and delightful experiences.

A little help from the mother or older friend will not be despised, however. If the older one is in sympathy. Let her look at trees, for instance, from the child's point of view. Here is a great oak. Isn't it like a kindly giant? See how strong it is. Don't hamper the youngster's mind by telling how useful wood is. He doesn't care a snap about wood; he loves the great strong tree itself and the birds and squirrels finding shelter in its branches. Then here is a willow drooping over a stream. This is the fairy princess, and she is looking for her prince who is a river spirit and who has gone away on a long voyage of discovery. What wonderful things he will have to tell her when he comes back.

When the president could first be so called at his home in Oyster Bay the most who write the story numbers, and not one of them was satisfied with less than a column a day about the Roosevelt children, and it is betraying no confidence to tell how the president put a stop to it. He invited one of the reporters to the hall and asked him if he would not send out the following story:

"I called upon the president today and he told me that his oldest son, Theodore, had gotten up very early in the morning to gather minnows in the pond, and he had a bucketful he went out into the bay and with these as bait caught a whale."

"The next two boys found their father's hunting guns and in an hour and a half they had shot the mammoth, and as you were leaving you saw one of the children setting fire to the rear of the house, and the baby was tearing down the windmill."

Roosevelt's Sarcasm Wins.

As the president was quite serious about it and wanted the story printed it was. Every managing editor in the country saw the exquisite sarcasm of the story, and the telling of the doings of the Roosevelt children stopped. Telegrams and letters came to the correspondents that they had better water the depot and the docks for the coming and going of visitors of importance.

It is to be hoped that the president will not be pestered this summer with the attentions of too many of the fraternity who write of his doings, something that in itself is not offensive to him. It is certain, however, that the docks and the railroad depots will not be left unwatched by the enterprising collectors of the news.

Show the little one the maple seeds already showing their form and shape before the little blossoms have dropped and the hazel nuts swelling into form, ready for the chipmunk's winter food. As the child grows older he will look and begin to discover for himself, and will perhaps come upon some truth which will be of great benefit to the world. If not that, at any rate he will have always a close and familiar acquaintance with the outdoor world and will cling to the recollection of these early walks and talks when all nature was so fresh and wonderful. He will always be glad of the insight into nature left large fortunes to both his sons. Since then Oscar Lewisohn has dwelt at will either in New York, London or Paris. As a man about town, as a clubman and the owner of a crack racing stable, he became as familiar a figure to Broadway as his elder brother, Jesse Lewisohn. It is said that Mr. Lewisohn's family raised a storm of disapproval when he pronounced his intention to marry Edna May, but as he is now secure in the possession of his share of his father's millions, the young man can afford to ignore these protests. It is interesting to note, by the way, that Miss May has followed the example recently set by several other famous actresses in marrying a man who is quite a few years younger than herself.
