CENTRAL AFRICA'S ROAD

said that it has been a powerful civilizing agency.

It has helped to accustom the natives of that densely peopled region to work for the whites and to use calico and other European articles. The work of construction was the first industry on a large scale of the utilization of native labor in Central Africa. Many trained laborers now live along the road and are engaged in transport service between the two great lakes.

This highway is known as the Stevenson road. Mr. Chrapkovski, official in the German service, who recently travelled over the road has written an interesting account of it.

Nyanza and Tanganyika, the best high-way in Central Africa. As nothing has been done to maintain the road it is now covered with grass, but travellers say this is really an advantage as the vegetation has helped to keep the road open, while the natives have cut back brush for the feet of the carriers who dislike to walk on those stretches where there is no grass. It is as hard as stone and hurts their feet.

The usefulness of the road is proved by the fact that it carries 60 pounds on their backs make an average of 28 miles a day, while the usual journey is only 10 miles. The road passes entirely through British territory, and the government has erected a station every 20 miles, where caravans may spend the night.

The road was intended and is well adapted for the use of wagons, but unfortunately the South African oxen that were brought into the country did not thrive there and the experiment of using them was given up. As long as oxen were used, large wagons loaded with 6,000 pounds of freight and drawn put all the freight under cover, comfortable brick and concrete houses afford excellent conditions for a good night's rest and there are cook houses where the meals of the caravans are prepared. One of the neighboring chiefs is held responsible for the cleanliness and good order of each station. He receives a monthly salary of a few shillings from the government and a few yards of calico from each caravan passing over the route.

When the oxen proved a failure small animals hauled by the natives and carrying about 1,000 pounds of freight were introduced, but it was finally decided that transport on the backs of men who receive only from five to seven shillings a month was cheaper, and now vehicles are seldom seen on the road.

Indians Seeking Divorce. Klamath Falls Cor. Sacramento Bee.

The Klamath Indians are adopting the current society fad of getting divorces. Tim Brown, Indian, has filed suit in the circuit court to secure a divorce from his squaw. This is the first case on record in the county clerk's office where an Indian has begun divorce proceedings.

Dr. Douglas was in this office yesterday with a curiosity in the shape of a double rose. It was a red rose or the common variety, but in the center another stem had grown on which was a rose equal in every way to the one from which it had grown. The bush from which it was picked is full of roses of the same peculiar variety.

The doctor accounts for this unusual growth from the fact that the first rose was split in two and retained the unusually late spring, and that this second or double growth followed.
