

ORCHARD EXAMINED BY HAYWOOD'S ATTORNEYS

Defense Builds Groundwork for Overturning Testimony of Assassin.

AFFIDAVIT MEN ARE INTRODUCED IN COURT

Flat Denials of Alleged Interviews Are Secured From Star Witness for State and People Brought Forward to Try to Impeach Him.

(By Hugh O'Neill, Special Commissioner for Denver Post and Oregon Journal.)

Boise, Ida., June 25.—Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock, and the sun shining outside the closed shutters of the dim courtroom and Harry Orchard again on the stand with Richardson's voice booming at him, reading questions from a sheaf of notes in his hand.

"Did you, sitting on a leather sofa in the Belmont rooming-house in Denver, some time in 1904, one Lottie Day baling with you, did you tell her that you had only loved one woman in your life; that poverty had parted you from her; that Steuneger had run you out of the Cour d'Alone, making you a poor man, and that you would get the same day?"

And Orchard's monotonous voice came back emphatically. "No, sir; I did not."

"Did you or did you not?" boomed Richardson, "sit on that same sofa in that same room, and tell Lottie Day that whenever you made a rise at game, you kept it in his safe for you?"

And again Orchard in denial: "No, sir; I did not."

Affidavit Men Called.

"Is Mr. Reed in the room?" said Richardson. "No, sir," said Orchard. "A man stood up in the middle of the hall."

"Look at him," said Richardson to Orchard. Orchard swung round in his chair and looked at Reed.

"Do you know him?" said Richardson. "I do," said Orchard.

"Did you," boomed Richardson again, "tell that man, F. R. Reed, in Union hall No. 40, Cripple Creek, no one else being close enough to hear, that Steuneger had ruined you and that you meant to get even with him?"

And yet once again came Orchard's denial: "No, sir; I did not."

Then Richardson and Darrow and John Nugent and Haywood and Edgar Wilson crowded their heads together and there was a long silence in the courtroom while the whispered to each other.

Then Richardson said "That's all." The defense had asked for the reproduction of Orchard in order that they might test him against the forthcoming evidence of denial and "affidavit men," and, considering Lottie Day and the leather sofa, "affidavit woman," too.

Richardson Is Stung.

Hawley asked a few perfunctory questions and then Richardson took

Orchard and again Richardson got "stung."

"Is Mr. Joseph Scholts in the room?" he boomed.

A blonde young man with a narrow forehead and piercing eyes stood up in the dim rear of the courtroom.

"Come forward," said Judge Wood. The blonde young man marched down to the railing. Orchard swung around and looked at him.

"Did you know Joseph Scholts in Cripple Creek?" boomed Richardson. "I knew a man who called himself by that name," said Orchard.

"Is that the man?" boomed Richardson. "No," said Orchard emphatically, "it is not."

The blonde young man at the railing blinked. Richardson thumbed his notes and hesitated.

"Oh," he said at last, "what sort of a man was the Scholts you knew?"

Knew Big Man.

"A big man," said Orchard, "slightly bald, fair mustache, something the matter with his eyes."

"Not this man," said Richardson. "No, sir," said Orchard. The blinking blonde young man retired. And no Western Federation man used his own name? came a quiet voice from the silence from the front of the room.

"Mr. Darrow told us that yesterday," Richardson sat down and Orchard marched out with his guards.

Then came Mrs. Mary King, rooming-housekeeper of Cripple Creek, who told Darrow that the detective for the state, Stirling, had a room with her and was sometimes visited by Orchard. That was between January and March of 1904.

Frances King followed Mrs. King, her mother, affirming also that Orchard had sometimes visited Stirling. There was no cross-examination of Miss King.

Kandaily Is Called.

After Miss King came Mrs. Alice Fitzhugh, another rooming-house keeper, who kept the Star rooming-house at 211 Bennett avenue, Cripple Creek. Mrs. Fitzhugh had apparently bought the Star from Mrs. King. She also knew K. C. Stirling, who had room 2 in the Star.

Mrs. Fitzhugh was a very glib person, who had Darrow snowed under with her replies in a minute. She also had seen Orchard visiting Stirling. Mrs. Fitzhugh was wearing white kid gloves, and as she talked she waved her arms in emphasis until the gloves were flapping in the air.

After the three women came a man, C. W. Allen of Leadville, a railroad man, once of Cripple Creek. Allen said he knew G. C. Scott and K. C. Stirling. He knew the Florence & Cripple Creek road. He did not know who employed Stirling, but he saw Scott and Stirling together often during the winter of 1904 and the spring of 1905.

Allen had seen Harry Orchard at the Cripple Creek depot talking to Scott three weeks before the Independence depot was blown up. Allen said that Scott had talked to him about Orchard, but the rules of evidence precluded Allen saying that D. C. Scott had talked to him about Orchard. On the afternoon of the day D. C. Scott had talked to Allen about Orchard, D. C. Scott and K. C. Stirling and Harry Orchard had a brief meeting in D. C. Scott's room in the Cripple Creek depot.

Darrow Falls Down.

Richardson had proved himself a laborious and tedious cross-examiner, but Darrow showed up badly in comparison. Borah hesitated away off from leading questions again and again, and all that Darrow got from Allen was the repeated statement that once in Scott's room in the Cripple Creek depot, Scott and Stirling and Orchard had been together at one time. And in cross-examination by Hawley Allen admitted that he could not fix the time of the meeting any closer than by saying that it occurred between the January and June of 1904. Altogether it seemed a weak morning's work for the defense.

ASSASSIN ON STAND

F. R. Reed, a Goldfield miner, said Orchard told him in Cripple Creek he would kill Steuneger, who drove him out of Idaho, robbing him of a fortune.

Darrow asked Reed about the deposition. Reed said he had been objecting and fought hard to keep the lid on regarding the actual action of the Colorado authorities in deporting miners. A verbal battle followed between counsel which was spirited, lengthy and voluminous, both sides fighting hard to gain the point they wanted.

MAY STRIKE

Local telegraphers are confident that the San Francisco strikers will win their contention. News from the scene of trouble brings notice of no new developments there. Chief Operator Durkee of the Portland Postal office and Manager J. Dunn of the Western Union at Seattle have been called to San Francisco and it may be possible that they will be the cause of Portland operators walking out, though it is not probable under present conditions. Rumor has it that the companies intend to draft the loyal men from Portland and Seattle to take the keys in San Francisco, but notice has been served that such a course would mean a strike in these two cities. It is said here that fully 98 per cent of the operators in Portland and Seattle are members of the union and would not support the company in the event of any attempt at drafting.

It is expected among the operators that unless the company shows some evidence of a conciliatory spirit within a few days some other main office will be closed up in sympathy with the San Francisco strikers. Where this step will be taken is only a surmise, but it is expected to be one of the important centers, which would still further paralyze
