to be the liability of accidents. They are very common. "I knew of a little girl the other day who fell and sustained a compound frac-ture in her arm. She is cured now, both as to her arm and of skating. It seems to me a fad for which there is little excuse. I suppose it would be no harm if taken sensibly, but fads are almost always overdone. I have not found any trouble from skating in the streets." . T believe that children in the streets are a rather, necessary nuisance and I

"T believe that children in the streets are a rather necessary nuisance and I simply go out of my way for them, and people who complain are usually con-sidered grouchy. Most of the complaints I have had have been from injuries sustained through falls."
