ORATOR LOWELL WAXED ELOQUENT

Marquam Grand Exercises Featured by Patriotic Speeches.

NATION'S GROWTH IS PRIDE OF CITIZENS

Achievements Which Independence Day Signifies Will Always Be Dearest to the Hearts of All True American People.

Judge S. A. Lowell was the orator at the Fourth of July exercises held in the Marquam theatre this morning. He said in part:

"As citizens of the great republic we pay tribute to the memory of the men who founded the nation, and the achievements which this day signifies will be a source of pride so long as American history lasts and English tongue is spoken, but unless out of history there comes a new dedication to the principles of the historic document of Jefferson, the stately ceremonies which form the pageantry of this land today are but 'sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.' Our times demand a new Declaration of Independence; independence from the thraldom of precedent.

Abandon Some Ideas.

"Magnificent as has been the achievement of our system of education, it has never been able to shake off the fetters of inherited ideas, foreign alike to the age and the condition under which the government was established and under which we live. College and university still cling to the Latin and Greek fetich which belongs to the middle ages, and insist upon courses in higher mathematics which not one graduate out of a hundred will ever use in active life. If education is to be education parents and teachers must early analyze the child's tastes and powers and direct him in that course of study which will prepare for a life work to which his ambition leads and to which he is mentally and physically adapted. The misfit product of our schools is in great degree responsible for the social unrest which troubles us.

"The church, at once the foundation and hope of civilization as we know it, has lost its hold upon the masses because it has failed to adapt itself to changed conditions. The temple ceremony had its place in antiquity; the sermon was adapted to the time which preceded the universality of the printing press. The present requires a concrete acceptance of the new dispensation. The Salvation Army may not be perfect, but it touches the needs of our times in its pure democracy and catholic charity.

Work for the Church.

"There is yet a mighty work for the church of Christ, but it cannot be done by the methods of the past or by costly temples or with tainted gold.

"Both the common law and statute law as applied in this era of dollar supremacy have lost that respect of the masses which has made the history of jurisprudence exalted. The fault is not so much in the law as in the lawlessness of law enforcement.

Too Much Litigation.

"It is a serious question whether or not our judicial system does not permit too many and to facile appeals. The trial of a cause before an honest judge and an intelligent jury ought usually to end the litigation.

"The gravest danger, however, which confronts our judicial system, is the enforcement of criminal laws. Spasmic reform is now agitating the land and a few peace officers are recalling their oaths of office, but for a quarter of a century crime has been rampant in high places, while tribunals of pretended justice have reached out to punish only the poor and unfortunates. Notorious as has been all this, it is not strange that the law and courts have lost the public esteem which once was theirs.

"If the millions of the over rich are to be returned to the people, the times demand benefactions which shall eliminate suffering and enhance opportunities, the establishment of institutions where mature medical devices may be assured time and means to devote their lives to the study and mastery of disease; where scientists may develop domestic economies and save to industry and the home the enormous loss of heat and energy in all fuel burned, and set other millions to revolving funds to aid the urban poor in the establishment of rural homes, to the end that our national development may be symmetrical and that we may become again a nation of land owners, characterized by that sobriety and conservatism which always attaches to the owner of a home.

"The acceptance of money questionably obtained by the donor may be a debatable question, but beyond all controversy the flaunting of it in the face of youth will lower the moral standard, and the problem of coming generations will not be lightened money, but tainted men.

World Responsible.

"We have become a world power, and domestic reforms can no longer alone concern us. In the hands of Germany

PULL TOGETHER, URGES MAYOR

City Executive Sends Strong Biennial Message to Council in People's Behalf.

A plea for harmony and a strong pull together for the best interests of the people vitalize Mayor Lane's second biennial message to common council read in the first session of the new body yesterday afternoon. In his message the mayor said he would not enter into any detail of administration, but would call attention to the condition of affairs as contingencies arise. The message follows:

"The Honorable City Council: At the beginning of the biennial term of the administration of city affairs I deem it not improper to call attention in a general way to certain conditions which present themselves for consideration.

"As I understand the premises we occupy, our respective positions of public honor and trust as the agents and emblems of the people, to whose aid to none other do we owe any duty of any nature whatsoever.

"It is my full and firm belief that in our position of trust our duties at all times call upon us to exercise an active and aggressive line of procedure in the conduct of affairs which concern the welfare of the people of this city, and that a failure to exercise such active interest or a perfunctory performance or evasion of such duties are large and heavy slights, which concern such interest or welfare of the people will be neither more nor less than evidence of bad faith upon our part, and one for which we should be held responsible to the full extent of our shortcoming.

"The affairs of the city are large and increasing at a rapid rate and the duties and cares of our positions are onerous and call for much and careful attention, yet we entered into our obligation with the full knowledge that such conditions existed, and there will be no reasonable or just excuse for the placing of private interests before those of the public and if it so happen that anyone's private interests are such a natural result to prevent or interfere with his giving full consideration to the affairs of the city, the plain and only course for him to pursue will be to resign his public position and allow some other person, who will give the necessary attention to such affairs, the opportunity to do so.

"The day in which the servants of the people can play 'ducks and drakes' with the people's interests, or pay attention to personal or political debts or other obligations at the expense of the people has gone by and let us hope never to return. The people are now awake and keenly alive to the conduct of their affairs, and they expect and demand of their agents that true and just service to which they are entitled, yet withal the people are patient and long-suffering and in their own hearts they are prone to mistakes of judgment, where the error is attributed to the head and not the heart, and no more need we resist his case with them, in full confidence, and therein is our protection and our shield when we pursue our way openly and fairly.

"The people, in my opinion do not look kindly upon the public official who will or does accept gratuities of any form from private corporations, nor should they, it being evidence of bad taste or blunted sensibility upon his part to say the least.

"The parting with public property or rights for long or short terms to private persons or corporations without just and careful consideration and reservation of the rights of the public, in my opinion is a criminal use of authority upon the part of public officials and should not be countenanced for one moment by the community at large.

"Acts of special legislation sought for and frequently passed in behalf of individuals are but the result of personal or political considerations, and are unworthy of your consideration; the law should be administered to all alike and therein lies the only safe and just course to pursue.

"I will not enter into any details at this time regarding improved and better methods which are required concerning the carrying on of the city's affairs which affect the economy of the city, but of the same, but from time to time will call attention to them as such questions arise and will close by assuring you of my hearty cooperation in every effort which you can make or will suggest respecting the betterment of the affairs of this city.

"Assuring you also that I have no enemies to punish or friends to reward in the administration of the city's affairs and that my only desire is to accomplish as much good for the benefit of the people as is possible, and to that end I at all times will be deeply grateful to you for your wise aid, counsel and advice."

England and America now lie the trend of civilization and the destiny of the world.

"Today the three nations united, can, if they will, dominate council chambers, direct the policy of governments, regulate international relations, and put an end to war. National commercial rivalry and the precedents of international law which preclude one state from interfering with the domestic affairs of another are preventing that unity of action which the times and conditions demand.

"The performance of the present peace conference is a sort of an international sewing circle, and its conclusions will have equal weight with resolutions passed by that historic institution of our mothers. Yet every delegate in that august conference knows that cabinets at Berlin, London and Washington can proclaim and assure international peace, for the world knows that they can maintain it.

"Christendom has shuddered with horror for a year at the story of the mutilation of natives in the Congo who failed to bring their tithe of rubber to the agents of King Leopold, but in no one of the 18 nations which participated in the famous Berlin conference have the sufferers found a champion. What excuse can the Anglo Saxon-race offer for neglect like this?

"The time probably has not arrived for the establishment of a republic in Russia, but a constitutional monarchy would satisfy the advocates of liberty and forestall revolution which, when it comes, will rival in its terrible anarchy the French reign of terror.

"Who can doubt where the responsibility for the continuance of existing conditions lies? A joint note from the belligerent nations to the czar suggesting such reform would in a day end the farce now playing as government at St. Petersburg.

"Unless the nations shake off the fetters of the past and rise with originality to the performance of certain duty, some day the lowly and oppressed of earth will not appeal in vain. A power will arise having the courage of conscience and of righteousness. The lord of hosts will bear his arm, and he it will be the arm of the avenger."
