

WORK OF ART HIDDEN IN WHOLESALE DISTRICT

Skidmore Fountain of National Reputation.

Doubtless there are many residents of Portland who do not know that in the heart of the wholesale district is one of the finest pieces of American sculpture the world has known. Designed by Olin Warner, one of the best known of American artists, a beautiful fountain was placed there in 1888, at the intersection of Vine and Ankeny streets, where many people, especially visitors to the city, never go.

In an appreciation of Warner and his art in Scribner's Magazine of October, 1896, the writer, W. C. Brownell, closes a eulogy on the sculptor's art and temperamental qualities with these words: "The fact that Warner's figures look calmly down upon bugs and buckboards and shirtsleeves and slouch hats in Oregon instead of decorating Central Park is grotesquely significant of much."

Talk of Removal Revived. Maybe this comparative obscurity is the reason why there has been a suggestion of the fountain's removal to another location and the corner of Seventh and Ankeny streets has been mentioned. Of course, the converse is true—that a thing of beauty has a seducing influence on the most common-place surroundings, and it was probably with such a thought that Stephen G. Skidmore named his site. Far more likely would confirmed art lovers from other districts go to the wholesale tract than would the clerks and teamsters of that district come to the center of the town to view the beauty of Warner's work. Stephen G. Skidmore came to Portland in 1850 and lived here till his death in 1885, which took place while in San Rafael, California. In his will he left $5,000 for this fountain. The committee, consisting of John Gates, mayor, Rev. Thomas L. Elliot, Henry Failing, William M. Wadhams, C. E. S. Wood and Charles E. Sifton, worked for three years and on September 22, 1888, the monument was turned over to the city. Dr. Elliot presided at the exercises. Rev. George H. Atkinson made the invocation, C. E. S. Wood gave a splendid address on behalf of the committee, C. E. Sifton unveiled the monument, Judge W. H. Adams gave the address on the part of the city, and Tyler Woodward turned on the water into the basins.

Modeled in Warner's Studio. The bronze work was modeled in Warner's studio in New York, and cast by Bureau Bros. in Philadelphia. It is almost purely Greek in style, the period of work in which Warner is believed to have excelled. The sculptor himself pronounced it the finest work in the United States in proportion to its cost. The fountain is built on a granite octagonal base, on four sides of which are horse troughs. Water issues from lion heads into these troughs. Above is a large bronze basin resting on a central granite shaft with bronze caryatides on each side. These caryatides are the artistic beauty of the fountain. They are female figures of pure classic type, with heads inclined forward and arms bent at an acute angle supporting the upper basin. Their drapery consists of thin tunics lightly clasped at the shoulders.

Inscriptions on Four Sides. The inscriptions on the four sides of the base give the dates and name of the donor; the names of the committee, sculptor, and architect, J. M. Wells; the date of erection, and the following motto: "Good citizens are the riches of a city."

To quote Mr. Brownell in Scribner's again, he says: "The caryatides (of the Portland monument) and Warner's doors for the new congressional library represent the high mark of American imaginative sculpture." As to the suggestion of moving the monument, while it is conceded by many that it is now in an out-of-the-way place, it is said, that as Mr. Skidmore specifically named the place in his will, the site cannot be changed, and that, moreover, the monument is so firmly fixed on its huge granite base that the work of moving would be almost impossible.

SOUND LADS GO HOME IN DEFEAT

Multnomah Athletes Take Both Games From the Seattle Team.

After winning the forenoon game from the Seattle Athletic club by a score of 2 to 1 yesterday, Multnomah rubbed in the victory a little more diligently in the afternoon by defeating the Seawashes 6 to 3. Fowler pitched in the forenoon and although striking out 11 of Multnomah's batsmen lost his game on a couple of bad errors. In the afternoon he was again called into the game after the local wallops had smashed the cover off of the balls that Wadesford was delivering in the sixth and seventh. Fenton distinguished himself by making two running overhanded catches of line drives between first and second in the fifth and ninth innings. His catch in the latter inning retired the side after Tenney had scored Brown and himself with a home run smash over center. Campbell made monkeys of the Seattle crew during the entire game in the afternoon with the exception of the ninth, when he let down with strong batters facing him. Scores:

Tri-City Leaguer Allows But Five Hits in Fourteen Innings.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS. At Portland—Frakes 8, Brewers 6. At Salem—Woodburn 7, Trunkmakers 9. At Astoria—Morning—Cubs 8, Bohemians 3. Afternoon—Bohemians 8, Cubs 4. At Kelso—Kelso 5, St. Johns 4.

Tomorrow afternoon on the Vaughn street diamond the Trunkmakers and the St. Johns Apostles will meet and have a set-to. Manager Partlow has strengthened his team by the addition of a new battery and a couple of hard-hitting infielders and will make a determined effort to pull the Apostles down a notch or two. The game will be a good one notwithstanding the fact that the Trunks are in the cellar. Cheyne will umpire. Sunday afternoon the Kelso Tigers, one of the strongest of the Tri-City league teams, will appear upon the Vaughn street diamond, for the first time, in fact this is the first time that a Kelso team has ever played on a Portland diamond. Their opponents will be the Brainard Cubs, who have been until lately the cellar champions. These two teams have met twice this season at Kelso, the Cubs winning the first game and Kelso winning the second by a narrow margin. Both teams are playing championship ball and each is determined to win the rubber and change their position in the percentage column. The Tigers are a five ball team, composed of experienced players, many of whom have played minor league ball. This game will be well worth witnessing. Cheyne will umpire.

Each Takes One. The Cubs and Bohemians split even at Astoria yesterday in two rather ragged but interesting games. The morning game was played in the mud and was won by the Cubs by the decisive score of 8 to 3. The Bohemians not having a look-in. "Midget" Streit was on the mound for the Cubs and had the husky "Bohunks" a his mercy, allowing but four hits. Backus, the big twirler for Astoria, was put out of business in the fourth inning and Wolfe, a new slabster, was put in his place.

FOURTH MATCHES ON IRVINGTON COURT

Four matches were played out on the Irvington tennis court yesterday, working toward the finals in the tennis tournament. In the semi-finals, men's doubles, Row and McAlpin defeated Cawston and Warren, 6-2, 8-5, 4-6, 6-4. Northrup went down before Ferris in the men's singles, 6-4, 6-3. Crofton defeated Edgar, 6-4, 6-1. Miss Schafer and Benham won easily from Miss Leadbetter and Warren, 6-4, 6-0.
