NEW FOOD LAWS SOUND ADVICE HELP TO STATE

Operations of Enactments All Portland Business Men Bankers Think Inland Em-Will Do Much for Oregon Packing Industry.

MEANS DUE CREDIT FOR BARTLETT PEAR

Heretofore a Large Part of Beaver State Crop Went to California and Was Given to the World as Sunshine State Product

The operations of the new pure food laws will do much for the packing industry of Oregon and likewise add state as a producer of good things. For instance, it was formerly the custom packers to buy large amounts of Orebe canned and labeled as fancy California Bartletts. A large per cent of the Oregon Bartlett pear crop very often went to California and was given to the world as California fruit. The Ore-gon pears are considered the best pro-duced in the country and the labeling of them as California fruit did not in any way detract from the reputation of that state. Oregon was the only one

Years of Palse Labeling.

For years this practice of false labeling has been considered the proper thing by southern canners. They argued that as California was the best advertised state the products of Oregon, while of better quality, could be sold at so much more because it was put in a California can.

Southern Oregon produces a very fine peach that is considered just about right for canning, and every year the sales of this fruit to California canners has been very heavy. This same fruit was placed under California canners has been very heavy. This same fruit was placed under California labels and then reshipped to this city and sold at a premium after paying freight charges both ways.

It is perhaps in the salmon industry that Oregon has been hurt worse than in any other by false labeling. Many years have the canneries of Alaska shipped large amounts of their canned fish to Portland and labeled them as the Royal Columbia river Shinook salmon. In many instances the relabeling has been so coarse that the packers forgot to take off the first label explaining that it was nothing but Alaska salmon. The new law will put a stop to this practice and likewise enable the consumer to secure Columbia river salmon when it is called for.

Substitution Prequent.

Sometimes canners have put up fall salmon when the label calls for spring fish and sometimes they have substituted the steelhead for the Royal Chinook just because the latter was scarce and cost more money. Spring salmon is the best salmon and for that reason commands a better price than others.

The new national pure food law as it regards labeling is as follows:

"A simple or unmixed food or drug product not bearing a distinctive name shall be designated by its common name in the English leavings.

We have made a fair success, and we are wedded to the west. Nearly every one of these men could have fine positions by returning to New York, but I doubt if one of them could be induced to leave the west, with its golden opportunities. "There is something peculiar about this 'call of the glorious west.' I have never met an easterner, who had been west and returned to his eastern home that didn't confess to an eternal longing to return to the land of the chinook winds and the snow-clad mountains. And almost always back he comes, and the east knows him no more."
