WEATHER REPORT

A weak high pressure area is central off the mouth of the Columbia river and a shallow low pressure area over the Arizona. The barometer is relatively high over the eastern states. During the 24 hours ending with the report lighter rain fell in Washington and Oregon, northern Idaho, Montana, the Dakotas, Nebraska, western Iowa, northwestern Missouri, the lower lake region, middle Atlantic and New England states. It is cooler than usual in the Rocky mountain and Pacific states, but in the eastern states the temperatures are generally about five degrees above normal.

Indications are for unsettled weather in this district tonight and tomorrow with occasional light rain in northwestern Oregon, Washington and northern Idaho.

CONSTRUCTION GANG FINDS OLD SEA BEACH

Railroad Workmen Uncover Specimens of Sea Shells Imbedded in Sandstone 120 Feet Above the Present Sea Level Near Springfield in the Willamette Valley.

Sea Shells Imbedded in Sandstone, Dug Up Near Springfield Junction.

An old sea beach has been uncovered 120 feet above present sea level by a construction gang of the Southern Pacific, working near Springfield Junction, in the Willamette valley. Some of the finest specimens of sea shells imbedded in sandstone that have ever been found are being taken out of the deposit.

J. P. O'Brien, general manager of the Oregon lines of the Harriman roads, who stopped at Springfield Junction when en route home from Corvallis a few days ago, brought a large chunk of the sea beach to Portland. The accompanying cut shows the specimen reduced to about one sixth the actual size. It contains clam shells and various kinds of sea shells of the eocene or older period of the tertiary age. Dr. W. J. McGee of Washington, D. C., the eminent geologist, who is the secretary of the inland waterways commission, examined the specimen yesterday at The Journal office. He said:

"This is a sedimentary deposit of the tertiary age, probably the older or eocene period of that age. It is green sandstone of glauconite, and is a valuable fertilizer, as it is phosphatic. Practically the whole mass is a vegetable or animal formation. The green portion or sandstone is composed of foraminifers, a minute plant animal that is principally phosphate of lime.

"The shells or mollusks are carbonate of lime. The mollusks lived upon the foraminifers. This mass was, of course, the bed of a shallow sea that once occupied the Willamette valley. Ground up and scattered over a field, the material would increase its fertility, especially the second and third year."

Professor John Condon, in his "Two Islands," tells of the coming up of Oregon out of the sea, and the ocean's gradual receding from the Willamette valley and from central Oregon, leaving the Willamette and Columbia water-courses. He estimates, from various discoveries made by him of sea beds along the coast and in the interior, that the ocean formerly stood 150 feet higher than its present level. Other estimates say it was 200 to 250 feet higher.

A notable deposit of clam shells is to be seen along one of the principal streets of Astoria, where in cutting a street through the bluff at an elevation of about 150 feet above the lower town the graders laid bare an old beach. Professor Condon accumulated records and specimens from many of these old beaches in Oregon and Washington.

when he was a short distance off shore and asked him to take them across to Mercer island. He landed and they immediately seized him, and pressed a cloth, soaked in a strong smelling drug, to his face and held him fast till he became unconscious.

Tuesday morning about 2 o'clock, as he subsequently ascertained, and 52 hours after he met the two men on the lake shore. Pell says, he recovered consciousness. His hat, collar and tie were gone. His pockets had been rifled of a little more than $10.

Pell had not the slightest idea where he was. He stumbled through the woods till he found a trail that led him to a logging camp, where he obtained some breakfast. There he worked the greater part of the day at a rancher's house, thereby earning $2. He continued his walk to Sedro-Woolley up in the Skagit country. From there he telephoned his family and catching a train, on which he hid in a boxcar, made his way to Seattle.

LAY DRUGGED FOR 52 HOURS

Strange Story of Abduction and Wandering of B. H. Pell of Seattle.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Seattle, July 18.—A strange story of violence and robbery is told by B. H. Pell, who returned to his home in this city yesterday after being missing since last Saturday night, when he started across Lake Washington in a canoe. The canoe and Pell's hat were later found floating in the lake. He says two men called to him from the mainland the samples to be sent to the Portland fair, there to enter into competition with all portions of the state.

Ten silver cups for first prizes will be offered, with diplomas for second prizes. The silver cups will be similar to those given at the recent Salem cherry fair and will become the property of the winners. The prize list includes the following varieties: Spitzenberg, Northern Spy, Baldwin, Newtown, Ben Davis, Red Cheek, Fippin, King, Grimes' Golden and Jonathan.

Silver cups and diplomas will be awarded as first and second prizes, respectively, for general display of 10 or more varieties, and for general display of 10 or more varieties on plates; for best display on plates, a gold medal.

All fruit entered must be in the regular commercial pack and any material entered for premium will become the property of the Horticultural society.

GREAT MILL COMPANY BUILDS A DRY TOWN

Two Attempts of Thirst Appeasers Made Void by Authorities. Who Apparently Favor the Policy of the Town Builders.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Moscow, Ida., July 18.—The Potlatch Lumber company, which owns the town of Potlatch, containing over 1,000 population, situated about 16 miles north of Moscow, is having a difficult time to keep out dispensers of liquor. The town is without a city government or any police protection except a deputy sheriff commissioned by the sheriff but paid by the company, and the company firmly refused to rent quarters to anyone working in the liquor business. They are particularly anxious that the obtaining of liquor by their employees be made as difficult as possible.

Liquor dealers, however, have tried in various ways to place their goods without the reach of these employes, and to facilitate their plans bought a tract of land within half a mile of Potlatch, and built there a building, put up a few buildings, one of which was a saloon, and thought they had their object accomplished.

The county commissioners, however, refused to grant the necessary license and the saloon was compelled to close its doors.

Package Goods Only.

Last week, however, the liquor question appeared at Onawa in a new form. A couple of men rented a building and opened a place where they dispensed liquor in packages, not to be drunk on the premises, under the protection of a government license. When the word was passed around the thirsty began to assemble. Things went well for a day or two, when suddenly the employes swooped down on the place, arrested the proprietors and brought them down to Moscow to face the probate judge. They had overheard the fact that the state charges a license of $200 per annum for wholesale liquor dealers. They agreed to quit the business and place if the court would impose only a nominal fine. Thirty-five dollars and costs was the penalty fixed, and now the managers of the Potlatch Lumber company are wondering in what shape the rum power will next appear.

BEST FRUIT DISPLAY EVER SEEN IN LINN

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Albany, Or., July 18.—Linn county is to have a fruit fair some time in November. The arrangements are in charge of a committee of the Linn County Horticultural society, consisting of Judge C. H. Stewart (chairman), F. J. Miller, F. M. French, D. W. Rumbaugh and J. A. Howard. In connection, County Fruit Inspector E. C. Roberts is working to bring together the finest collection of fruits ever seen in Linn county.

This fair will be held in Albany some time before the state fruit fair at Portland and all counties are urged to send in exhibits and compete for the prizes to be offered. A personal invitation is being extended to the farmers and fruitgrowers of the valley. The fruits exhibited will become the property of the Horticultural society and from this display will be selected peep at him long in suspense. Almost as soon as the train stopped the figure of the vice-president appeared on the platform. Many hands were outstretched in greeting and Mr. Fairbanks was most affable. No one was overlooked and no introductions were needed, although E. L. Smith, who was present acted as master of ceremonies. No mention was made of either buttermilk or cocktails but the little story was touched upon by Mr. Smith, who remarked that the latter must be without foundation, to which Mr. Fairbanks responded with a smile but no comment. After expressing himself as much pleased with his reception at Hood River and his trip to the coast he boarded the train just as it was getting under way.
