whilst the initiative and reterential and the direct primary nominating law are in the tentative stage in Oregon, they promise much for the betterment of social and political conditions, if we may judge what may be done in future by what has already been accomplished."

Further, he says: "These popular measures will grow in strength and in favor. Their adoption in many other states and their discussion in all testify to the condition of the public mind and the determination of the people to win back to themselves the power of self-government given them under the constitution, but gradually surrendered to the machine and to special interests. If all that is hoped for is accomplished under these first enactments which look to the re-establishment of the people's rule, Oregon will go a step farther in the very near future and essay the recall of unworthy public seriously discussed on the rostrum and in the press."
