"Homesceker rates from the Middle! West to Oregon go into effect September 1, and continué until October 31. There remains but one month in which the various communities of the state are to do their advertising, and everything possible should be done to attract settlers in this direction," said Tom Richardson, secretary of the Oregon Development league, yesterday in discussing the outlook for fall immigration.

ing the outlook for fall immigration. Continuing he said:

"The rates are $25 from all Missouri river points, and from St. Paul west, to almost any point in Oregon, with a reduction on each ticket of $2.50 for points east of Umatilia. The rate from St. Louis is $30, Chicago $33. New York City $50, and a proportionate rate from any point in the entire east, and if the millions of people throughout the crowded sections of the older states could only be told these rates by a letter direct from some personal friend, relative or acquaintance in Oregon, the population of the state could be doubled in a short time.

Agree on Population.

Agree on Population. "Oregon people may disagree about many things, but all agree that increased population is absolutely necessary to make the state prosperous," Mr. Richardson said. "Oregon welcomes the tourist and the latch-string is out at all seasons of the year for visitors, but above all she welcomes the homeseeker, and it is the one-way colonist rate that above all she welcomes the homeseeker, and it is the one-way colonist rate that brings the homeseeker.

"Now we can't entirely depend upon the railroads doing this advertising because the same rate that is good to Oregon is also good to Canada and California, Texas and Georgia, in fact all of the railroads agree to put on a colonist rate for these two months, and those coming to Oregon get about the longest ride available in the United States for their money.

"Tickets are sold at the same price from a point in Illinois or any other state to Ashland as to Portland, but they must be bought to their destination from the ticket agent back east, and the only reason a large number bought their tickets heretofore to Portland was because the smaller communities in the state have failed to do proper and effective advertising. The marvelous prosperity of Corvallis and vicinity, brought about through intelligent and effective advertising and without the expenditure of any great amount of money, is an example that every community in the state of Oregon should follow:

"Personal letters from the men, women and children of Oregon to old friends in the east is the best possible advertising, but unless the commercial organizations take it upon themselves to see that people actually write the letters, no letters will be written. In one school district in Tillamook county the population was doubled in six months through the work of the school children, assisted by their parents, and this can be repeated in every portion of the state.

Ministers Should Boost.

Is there any objection to having the ministers of the state explain to their congregations what the colonist rate means to the community, and how it can be effectively used? Is there any better work for the women's clubs, can the state superintendent, the county superintendents and the teachers of the city and state do a better work than in seeing that the facts of these rates are put before the different communities so that they may become a part of every letter that goes out of the state."

Mr. Richardson said every community should issue small circulars, giving the facts of these colonist rates to that exact station and a few statistics relative to the country, and these circulars should be so light that they would not add to the cost of postage, and they should be put in every letter that goes out of the state.

"These one-way rates bring to this state people who come to stay," said Mr. Richardson, "but they must buy their tickets when they leave home for the point they want to reach, and each and every city and town in the state must keep this one fact before their people all the time. During last March and April hundreds of people came to Portland who wanted to go to points on the coast and down through the different valleys and as far away as Klamath Falls, who had bough, their tickets for Portland when they left home, thinking that the extra cost of getting from this city to their point of destination would be trifling, and the result was that they either located somewhere else or returned disgruntled and dissatisfied. "We make no headway by blaming the railroads, blaming Portland, or blaming anybody. The rate is available to several hundred points in Oregon; the tickets cost the same whether they are bought to The Dalles or Eugene, Astoria or Medford, Salem or

I am speaking of Princes Jeanne Bonaparte, daughter of Prince Roland. It is said—and I have every reason to believe the news is correct—that she is engaged to one of the sons of the king of Greece.

When marrying her this young prince is doing an excellent thing for himself if, that is to say, princes and kings can now without being sahamed of the fact, espouse the daughters of the plutocracy as formerly they wed shepherdesses.

KING OF ALLI CATFICH

As "'I'd Joe" He Is Known to Fisher men and Pilots of Cumberland.

Just how or when he received his cognomen no one seems to know, but should you call the name "Old Joe" anywhere along the Cumberland river above Celina, Tennessee, your hearers will at once become attentive, and usually the query, "Have you seen him?" or "Who saw him last?" will greet your remark.

"Old Joe" is an immense catfish, eight to nine feet long, and it is thought will weigh more than 200 pounds. He will weigh more than 200 pounds. He was first seen about 20 years ago in the Cumberland river where Marrowbone creek empties into that classic stream in Cumberland county. Since that time hardly a week passes during the fishing season that some one does not see this huge fish, writes a Glasgow correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and always near where he was first seen. The bodies of five women and two children were taken tonight from the lake. The following have been identified:

After "Old Joe's" habitation was established steamboat men began to look for him and there are very few pilous on the upper Cumberland that have not seen "Old Joe." If at any time a pilot spoke of having seen a log or snag in that locality he was promptly told it was "Old Joe."

Recently a well-known pilot on the Cumberland river had a good look at the king of the upper Cumberland, and in speaking of his observations says: "Some time since I had the pleasure of seeing this enormous catfish. In length I suppose it would measure close to eight feet, possibly more. I was in a position to get a good view of him while on duty in the pilot-house, being so high above the water I could see him clearly. Noticing a break in the water I thought it was a large snag. I had moved to the opposite side of my wheel in order to steer around what I thought to be a snag, when I saw what it was. I called to the clerk through the trumpet to get his gun and get that big fish. I was getting close on him when the clerk appeared with his gun, and he could only see the waves that the king of the Cumberland made on his descent to the deep. Old Joe's habitation is in the neighberhood of the mouth of Marrowbone creek. This fish, I suppose, would weigh more than 20¢ pounds. His tail seemed to be larger than a palmleaf fan."

As "Old Joe" has been a familiar figure for 20 or 30 years it is hard even to surmise how old he is, but river men are of the opinion that he must be more than 50 years old.
