CORPORATIONS TAXED MORE Assessor Has Been Raising Valuations in Clackamas County. (Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Oregon City, Aug. 1.—County Assessor Nelson reports the total property valuation of Clackamas county this year to be close to $12,000,000, an increase of $1,500,000 over last year's valuation. The increase is on corporation property and timber lands, the increase on corporations being close to $700,000. The increase on the Southern Pacific railroad property is $100,000, and on its acreage, including 50,000 acres of timber, $300,000. The increase on the J. W. P. property will reach $100,000. The Western and the Collins timber tracts were increased—271,453. In 1902 when Assessor Nelson took charge of the office, these lands were assessed at $1.25 per acre; now it is $12.50, the assessment rate for all mountain timber lands, those in the valley being fixed at $25. The total valuation of the county's property at that time was $4,516,000 as against the present valuation of nearly $12,000,000.

HOP CONTRACTS FILED AT OREGON CITY. (Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Oregon City, Aug. 1.—The following hop contracts were filed for record yesterday: H. A. and Sam Wolford of Needy, with E. C. Herren, 5,000 pounds of hops at 15 cents per pound; to be delivered on or before October 31. William Brush, Markburg, with E. C. Herren, 40 bales of 130 to 210 pounds each, at 15 cents per pound; to be delivered on or before October 31.

Talked With Napoleon. There is still living in the village of Liery, Belgium, a woman who spoke with the great Napoleon. She is the daughter of the woman who was with him at the battle of June 16, 1815—at that place. Her name is Mme. Anne-Joseph Burbay and she will reach her 102d birthday July 29. Her memory is still perfectly clear as to the incident. Napoleon had established his headquarters close to the little farm where she and her mother were alone. Her parents had buried their little stock of money and valuables in the ground, and in the morning the emperor came out and took up his position close to the spot. Fearing that he might discover the hiding place, the farmer's wife, to distract his attention, took her head in both hands and pretended to be suffering from toothache. This attracted the emperor's attention, and, coming over to the woman, he told her not to be afraid, but added that as the battle was about to be fought she should betke herself and her little girl to a place of safety. He then turned to the little Anne-Joseph, and, patting her on her cheeks, told her to be a "good little girl and take care of her mother." Encouraged by his kindness, the farmer's wife then told the emperor that her brother had served in one of his dragon regiments, but had not been heard of for several years. On ascertaining the name of the regiment Napoleon replied that it was one of those that had suffered most during the retreat from Russia, but he would have inquiries made. He then told them to hurry off into the forest of Sombrefeu until the fighting was over. Mme. Burbay has a perfect recollection of the emperor's appearance, and describes him as "a little man with a big nose."

She also remembers the scene of destruction and slaughter presented by the village when they returned the next day. She describes the French soldiers as "fine fellows," but her recollection of the Prussians is not so favorable, for "they ate up all our chickens and our two calves without paying for them."

Cold Drinks at Home. Cream Soda—Boll together two quarts of water, three pounds of sugar and two ounces and a half of citric acid (order from a druggist). Whip the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, mix with a little of the hot liquid, turn into the saucupan and stir and boil for two minutes. Take from the fire, let stand undisturbed for 10 minutes, then strain through wetted cheese cloth. Bottle and keep in a cool place. When using put three tablespoonfuls of this syrup in a glass, fill two thirds with ice water then add a half of a level teaspoonful of sifted baking soda. Stir and drink while foaming. Ginger Beer—Mix together one ounce of cream of tartar, one pound of light brown sugar, two large lemons scrubbed and sliced, very thin without paring, one ounce and a half of green ginger sliced thin. Add one gallon of boiling water, stir over the fire until the sugar is dissolved and boil for one minute. Pour into a large crock, add when cooled half a compressed yeast cake, dissolved in a little warm water, and let ferment for 24 hours; then strain and bottle. Tie down the corks and lay the bottles on their sides in the cellar. This is better than the end of a week than when new.

The secret of all female dress is in the wearing thereof. It has, or ought to have, a life of its own. It has a grammar and music of its own. To remark of hers; velvet is applied to soften a malicious adjective, and silk and its frof-frou are used to send inarticulate shivers into commonplace phrases. The conclusion then is this. Women in England do not excel in devising their proper costume because they will slavishly imitate the style of women essentially different from them.

But why do so? Why insist, sometimes, upon imitating the dress of English houses, English food, English drinks or no drinks, English table manners, English conversation; and why not apply some of this individualism to the devising of a costume better adapted to the build, nature and habits of English women?

The Realm

Dress Perversion. For English and American women to follow blindly the dictates of Parisian fashions is, says Dr. Emil Reich, a mistake. The dress of the women of the civilized world is mostly arranged at Paris, and is, of course, adapted to French women; hence it follows that when English and American women adopt it bodily the effect is sometimes incongruous.

The make of a French woman is essentially different, he avers, from that of an Anglo-Saxon woman. The latter is fine in repose; the French woman is charming by her movements.

From this alone it follows that in France women excel in what they call "attaches," or the finely differentiated joints of the various parts of the body, such as the attaches of the neck, of the elbow, of the wrist, of the ankles; in one word, French women are frequently quaintly decolpees. The dress is consequently meant to set off those attaches as favorably as possible. A woman lacking those subtle lines and joints distinguishes her several organs will have had a head which is usually meant for the charms of French attaches.

He tells you of friends and enemies, who is true and who is false, tells you when and when you will marry, giving name, date, facts and locations; taking no fee in advance and accepting none unless satisfaction is given. LOW FEE. 50 cents, 50 cents, 50 cents, 50 cents.

Or consider another point. English women walk very much more rapidly than do French women. In fact, while the most exquisite Parisienne is somewhat ridiculous when she is running, the English woman is very often at her best in the action of running. This indicates a thoroughgoing difference in the hard and soft parts of the body.

French woman never wears a small hat, without emphasizing every word with a gesture, while in England she wears a large hat, and is a grammar and music of its own. To remark of hers; velvet is applied to soften a malicious adjective, and silk and its frof-frou are used to send inarticulate shivers into commonplace phrases.

The conclusion then is this. Women in England do not excel in devising their proper costume because they will slavishly imitate the style of women essentially different from them.

The dress is consequently meant to set off those attaches as favorably as possible. A woman lacking those subtle lines and joints distinguishes her several organs will have had a head which is usually meant for the charms of French attaches.

He tells you of friends and enemies, who is true and who is false, tells you when and when you will marry, giving name, date, facts and locations; taking no fee in advance and accepting none unless satisfaction is given. LOW FEE. 50 cents, 50 cents, 50 cents, 50 cents.

Or consider another point. English women walk very much more rapidly than do French women. In fact, while the most exquisite Parisienne is somewhat ridiculous when she is running, the English woman is very often at her best in the action of running. This indicates a thoroughgoing difference in the hard and soft parts of the body.

French woman never wears a small hat, without emphasizing every word with a gesture, while in England she wears a large hat, and is a grammar and music of its own. To remark of hers; velvet is applied to soften a malicious adjective, and silk and its frof-frou are used to send inarticulate shivers into commonplace phrases.

The conclusion then is this. Women in England do not excel in devising their proper costume because they will slavishly imitate the style of women essentially different from them.

But why do so? Why insist, sometimes, upon imitating the dress of English houses, English food, English drinks or no drinks, English table manners, English conversation; and why not apply some of this individualism to the devising of a costume better adapted to the build, nature and habits of English women?

There is still living in the village of Liery, Belgium, a woman who spoke with the great Napoleon. She is the daughter of the woman who was with him at the battle of June 16, 1815—at that place. Her name is Mme. Anne-Joseph Burbay and she will reach her 102d birthday July 29.

Her memory is still perfectly clear as to the incident. Napoleon had established his headquarters close to the little farm where she and her mother were alone. Her parents had buried their little stock of money and valuables in the ground, and in the morning the emperor came out and took up his position close to the spot.

Fearing that he might discover the hiding place, the farmer's wife, to distract his attention, took her head in both hands and pretended to be suffering from toothache. This attracted the emperor's attention, and, coming over to the woman, he told her not to be afraid, but added that have built up such a standard for them in the West that you'll hear men every day say to one another, "Got an Imperiales?" instead of merely "Got a cigarette?"

Imperiales Cigarettes

The splendid smoking qualities of IMPERIALES CIGARETTES

It's the rich taste—the real smoking satisfaction—of Imperiales that have made the name mean "good smoke" everywhere.

That thin mais paper—crimped, not pasted—adds the rich Imperiales blend of tobacco in smoking smoothly and deliciously to the mouthpiece—and keeps them free from that "after effect" found with other cigarettes.

10 for 10 cents. The men of the West smoked 100,000,000 Imperiales in 1906. Sold Everywhere THE JOHN BOLLMAN COMPANY Manufacturers San Francisco

Fruit Vinegars—Pour a quart of good cider vinegar over a quart of washed and mashed berries. Cover and set aside for two days, stirring two or three times. Drain off all the liquid and pour it over another quart of pulped fruit. Let stand again for two days, then, if a strong fruit flavor is wanted, repeat the process a third time. Finally press out the vinegar and measure. For each pint allow one pound of sugar. Heat and boil for two minutes, skimming thoroughly. Bottle while hot. This keeps almost indefinitely. One or two tablespoonfuls of this syrup, added to a glass of ice water, Strawberry and raspberries are most frequently used.

THE SHORTEST SOLDIER How Young Kansan Under Required Height Got Into the Army. From the Kansas City Journal. Charles L. Dagan of Keats, Kansas, a young army recruit who enlisted in Kansas City and left with a squad of recruits for Jefferson barracks, near St. Louis, is probably the shortest soldier in the United States army. His height is 5 feet 2 inches. He was accepted only on the recommendation of President Roosevelt, to whom he wrote explaining the situation after he had been rejected on account of his height by the auxiliary recruiting station at Topeka early in April.

Dagan had entertained the hope of becoming a soldier for several years. He is now 22, and having no one dependent upon him, he went to the recruiting station to enter the service. He passed a rigid examination save for his height, but the news that for this reason he could not become a soldier did not deter him. He had decided to become one, and promptly wrote to President Roosevelt explaining the situation. He made an earnest appeal to the chief executive and the frank, earnest manner in which he couched his plea seemed to strike the president as that of the man who would make a good soldier.

This is probably the first instance of an
