Everybody is talking about it. Prof. DeLore's airship trip from Portland to Medford, Oregon, August 3. At the height of 3,000 feet he will throw out advertising matter for Golden Grain Granules, the 100 per cent pure cereal coffee, which all grocers sell for 25 cents per package. He expects to sail over Oregon City, New River, Canby, Barlow, Aurora, Hubbard, Woodburn, Gervais, Brooks, Chemawa, Salem, Turner, Marion, Jefferson, Milersburg, Albany, Tangent, Shedd, Halsey, Muddy, Harrisburg, Junction City, Luper, Kinnick, Eugene, Springfield Junction, Goshen, Creswell, Walker, Saginaw, Cottage Grove, Drive, Astoria, Leeson, Drain, Boswell Springs, Yoncalla, Rice Hill, Laadora, Oakland, Wilbur, Winchester, Roseburg, Green, Dillard, Mur- ble Creek, Riddle, Nichia, West Fork, Rueben, Glendale, Wolf Creek, Leland, Grants Pass, Woodville, Gold Hill, Tofo, Central Point, and land at Medford at 8 a. m. August 6, to take part in the opening exercises at the Medford fair.

George Fowler, an employe of the city engineer's department, narrowly escaped asphyxiation by sewer gas yesterday in a manhole at the corner of Front and Couch streets. Fowler, in company with several other laborers, had gone to the intersection of the two streets to repair some defect in the sewer. It was necessary for him to lower himself into the manhole, and after working for a few minutes Fowler was overcome by gas. His fellow workmen fortunately noticed his condition and hastily hauled him to the street. The patrol wagon was summoned, but Fowler quickly revived in the fresh air and it was not necessary to remove him to a hospital.

Fewer complaints of shortage of water have reached the city water department this year than in any previous year, although the growth of the city has taxed the capacity of the system during the first half of the summer. Practically all of the complaints have come from residents in the remote districts, people living at Mt. Tabor being the principal complainants. Here the main pipes do not carry water in sufficient amount to supply adequately all of the patrons. Water officials explain the small number of complaints as due to the fact that the slight last summer nearly 5,000 meters have been installed and patrons are required to pay for all of the water they use.

Examinations will be held August 28 and 29 for the following positions in the federal civil service: Editorial clerk (male) division of publications, salary of $1,400 per annum, August 28; Matron and seamstress in Indian service at Pine Point, Minnesota, Fort Berthold, North Dakota; Bena, Minnesota; Seger, Oklahoma, Oklahoma, and Wagonmaker in Indian service at Chemawa, salary of $720 per annum, August 28. Blacksmith in Indian service $720 per annum, August 28. The examinations will be held at Astoria, Baker City, Eugene and Portland.

At the residence of William MacLeod, near Northern Hill, a double wedding was celebrated last night. Mr. MacLeod's two daughters, Misses Chassie and Pearl were married. Miss Chassie became the wife of R. L. BeBott, and Miss Pearl married A. W. Buchanan. After the ceremony, which was pronounced by Rev. Henry Walls, the party assembled on the lawn, which was illuminated with Chinese lanterns.

Action on the three franchises pending before the St. Johns council was again postponed last night after a session had been called especially to discuss these matters. Mayor Couch was anxious to get some action taken, but the council was not so ready to act. A. R. Jobson made a proposition whereby the city of St. Johns may build its own gas plant and not grant any of the franchises.

The following articles left on streetcars yesterday may be recovered by the owners at room 4, O. W. P. building, Seaside. Eight miscellaneous packages, two pieces pipe, one tin, one lunch bucket, one grain sack, five umbrellas, one pair gloves, one pair glasses, one suitcase, one key, five purses.

For stealing newspapers from the doorsteps of residences where they had been placed by the carrier, Hymas Schwartz, aged 15 years, of 371 Baker street, was committed to the Reform school by Judge Fraser in juvenile court yesterday afternoon.

The will of G. M. Settlemier was filed in the county court for probate yesterday. The heirs are the widow, Mrs. M. E. Settlemier, and a daughter, Mrs. Blanche Stafford, of the daughter.

SOME DAY

You will be old and feeble and unable to earn your daily bread. What will you do then? Will you become an object of public charity or a burden on your children? Or will you save a part of your earnings so that when you are old you will have a nice fat bank account to protect you from want? It don't take much to provide for the future—just a little put by from your daily earnings will soon accumulate and form a nice sum which may be safely and profitably invested. The matter is worth thinking about. This strong bank will protect your savings. Just a little money will open an account and the door to prosperity.

Market Inspector Evans Reports That Humane Society Is Culpable in Not Looking After Live Poultry Brought Into City.

Mrs. Sarah A. Evans, market inspector, today, submitted to the city board of health her report for the month ending July 31, 1907. With this month Mrs. Evans begins her third year as inspector. The report contains a severe criticism of the Humane society which, she says, is culpable in not looking after the manner in which live poultry is brought into the city.

"At the request of the Consumers' league I prepared a condensed form of the national and state pure food law, of which they distributed 1,000 copies at the Chautauqua assembly," says the report. "I have also been asked by Mrs. Miller, chairman of the national committee, to prepare a circular on 'Practical Market Inspection in Portland' to be sent to the women's clubs throughout the United States."

The report shows that the inspector made 225 visits during the month. The hot weather, she says, has made it difficult to preserve perishable fruit in the best condition throughout the entire day and several complaints were received from this cause. With one exception, however, it was not found necessary to condemn any large quantity of fruit. With reference to the Humane society, the inspector's report says:

"I believe the Humane society is culpable in not looking after the manner in which live poultry is brought into the city. I have called their attention to it several times during the year. I found a box of chickens standing on the pavement in the hot sun, so closely packed together they could not stand up, and one had its entire back rubbed bare in its effort to stand. I had them liberated, but have no doubt they found their way into the market later."

NEVER ASKED TO SAVE ANY FUEL

Late Skipper of Columbia Denied Being Asked to Reach Port on Time.

DORAN SO STATED TO JOURNAL MAN

On One Occasion Ill-Fated Steamship Pushed Ahead in Thick Weather Before Disaster at Full Speed With Dead Mariner on Bridge.

From press reports of the official inquiry into the Columbia disaster now being held in San Francisco by Captain Birmingham, supervising inspector of the First district, evidence has been adduced tending to show that the terrible catastrophe was due primarily to demand of steamship companies of their captains to run strictly on schedule time, with a minimum consumption of coal.

That Captain P. A. Doran, the brave skipper of the ill-fated Columbia, who went down with the ship he loved, in all his marine experience was never asked by his employers to save a ton of coal, reach port at a specified time or take any undue chances with the vessel is demonstrated in a statement made by Doran to Monroe Goldstein of The Journal June 26, but 24 days before he met his death.

Statement to Journal Man.

The newspaper man was a passenger on the Columbia, leaving Portland on the morning of June 25. On the second night out Goldstein was discussing current events with Captain Doran, when the subject of marine disasters on the Pacific coast was broached.

"As it is not a fact, captain," asked the reporter, "that the majority of wrecks in these waters have been caused by the exactions of the managements of steamship companies to run on time and save coal?"

"In all my experience," declared Doran, "I have never been asked to reach port at a given time, or to burn a specified quantity of fuel. I am expected to bring my ship safely into port, but never in all the years I have been running on the coast has an explanation been demanded from me as to why I was late. If a delay in sailing occurs the management naturally want to know the cause."

"The assets of a steamship company are its steamers, and they neither want to sacrifice their lives nor the lives of passengers. It was only recently that I had to lie outside of the Columbia river bar for over eight hours, as I deemed it dangerous to cross on account of the fog and high seas. Several of the unreasonable passengers protested vigorously, and I know that they went ashore and told what an incompetent skipper I was. Criticism of that character does not bother me. The lives of everyone on this ship are in my charge, and I am not going to take any chances. I have often cruised about in the vicinity of the Golden Gate for half a day waiting for a favorable opportunity to go in. An illustration of the danger of haste was the sinking of the Rio Janiero. A wait of a few hours here on the outside until the fog lifted would have saved the vessel and several hundred lives.

Don't Believe Stories.

"No, sir, don't believe stories about captains being forced to take any chances with ships or being compelled to save coal. The fact that at times we lay a course within 12 miles of shore has aroused much criticism, but is absolutely necessary during north-easters to keep the steamer from being strained by the buffeting of the high seas."

Then the skipper who was so soon to go to a watery grave resumed his all-night vigil on the bridge. Yet in the face of his statements about not taking chances the Columbia proceeded on her way at full speed, despite the thickness of the night.
