Petition Year Old.

The pavement voted for by the ma-jority was bituminous macadam, and jority was bituminous macadam, and the city engineer was authorized to prepare the plans for this kind of improvement. The plans were not filed until April 3, 1907. It took the engineer from August 1, 1906, or eight months to get the plans seady. On May 1, the bond for the waiver was filed and preparations made to publish notice of the improvement. When all the necessary red tape had been completed necessary to publish the notice of the improvement it was found there had been an error in the notice. It all had to be repeated.

No Action Is Taken.

On July 5 the improvement was finally referred to the committee on streets of the executive board but no action has yet been taken. A meeting of the board will take place this afternoon, when the property owners expect to push the proceedings.

Some of the property owners believe

Some of the property owners believe that some corporation is hindering the improvement and are determined to find the trouble. The company which lays the bituminous macadam has ceased to urge that improvement and has substituted asphalt. The Portland Railways will also be required to lay heavy rails on the street for a considerable distance.

On July 31. 1906, the petition was filled with the city auditor. After 30 days, as is required by city ordinance, no remonstrance having been filed, the council granted the petition and the city engineer was instructed to prepare plans. The proceedings on the part of property owners were carefully planned. It was all decided before hand just what the improvement should be and the whole body resolved to adopt the kind of pavement the majority should vote for. Hawthorne avenue is one of the prettiest thoroughfares in the city. The Ladd tract with its asphalt streets are located on the avenue and must depend on it for an outlet to the city. The new Madison street bridge will lead directly to the avenue and will make it a popular drive. For all these reasons those who own property along the street were anxious to see the improvement proceed faster and are accordingly keen to find the cause of the long delays. entirely new to this country.
