WEATHER REPORT

The high area over the Washington coast yesterday morning shifted slightly to the northward and this morning over Vancouver Island. It was slowly diminishing in energy, but nevertheless maintained a controlling influence on the weather of the entire Pacific coast and intermountain region, clear skies being reported from the sections of the country except along the immediate coast, where dense fogs were prevalent. A storm area of some decided character was central this morning over northern Michigan, and moderate to heavy rains were reported from the lake region, Ohio valley and Tennessee. The temperature rose some what over Oregon and southern Idaho during the 24 hours ending with this report, but not elsewhere over this section. No marked thermal changes occurred. Indications point to fair weather to-night and tomorrow over this entire forecast district. It will be warmer to-night east of the Cascade mountains.

FIST FIGHTS END IN FOUR DEATHS

Two Encounters Result in Loss of Life of All Combatants.

MEN QUARREL WHILE IN TOP OF BREWERY

One Is Hurled to Ground and Other Takes Same Fatal Plunge in Effort to Save Him—Enemies Drown in Each Other's Arms.

(Journal Special Service.)
 London, Aug. 16.—Within a few days of each other two fights have occurred as thrilling as anything depicted in melodrama and each terminating in the death of both of the contestants.

The first tragic encounter took place on the top floor of a brewery fronting on the Thames. To this floor sacks of malt were being hoisted by means of a crane from barges in the river below. They were deposited on a platform from whence they were carried through a loophole into the building, and there three men were engaged on the work. Two of them were brothers, Henry and Thomas Middlebrook, and the third was named John Benjamin Cox. Cox was 50 years old, the two brothers were much younger men. They were going the job on piece work. Some dispute had arisen because the older man did not work fast enough to suit the brothers who were bent on making as much money as they could.

Thomas Middlebrook was called to the ground floor to attend to some sacks there. Exactly what transpired after the left is, of course, a mystery, for dead men tell no tales. It is supposed that the quarrel was renewed between Henry Middlebrook and Cox, only a few minutes elapsed after the latter Middlebrook had left them, when shouts and cries were heard by the workmen below. Even at the distance of fifty feet the sounds of blows and the tramping of feet plainly told that a fierce fight was in progress above. The last of battle seems to have occurred from their minds all thought of danger.

Staggered Out Loophole.

With dramatic suddenness came the finale. Reeling backwards from the effect of a blow, the older man came staggering out of the loophole, made a frantic effort to regain his balance on the little platform and then fell headlong to the river beneath. In the meantime his brother, for flight he had been instantly killed. His body was still in mid-air when his antagonist, Henry Middlebrook, rushed through the gate of death to the platform. In the brief fraction of time that had followed the blow which had hurled his opponent to the river, he had evidently undergone a change. Terrified at what had happened, he leaped forward over the platform with hands outstretched and apparently by some desperate hope that he might yet save the man. His remorse cost him his own life. He fell to the river below, a merciful cry fell to the forerunner below. When workmen rushed to the spot he was still alive but terribly injured, and he died a few hours afterwards without having regained consciousness.

Subsequent investigation of the top floor showed that the fight, though brief, had been a desperate one, for, like all corn porters, the men were possessed of great physical strength. In three places on the floor were blood-stains, one of them within a foot of the loophole.

On Deck of Trawler.

The deck of a steam trawler was the scene of the other deadly duel. The vessel had left Grimby for the North sea fishing grounds. When the vessel was off Spurn point two of the crew, Edward Townley and James Lamb suddenly engaged in a fierce quarrel. While Townley never came to the surface again, Lamb reappeared after a few seconds and began to swim, though evidently much exhausted. The steamer was stopped and a launch was sent out before it could reach him, but, alas, neither body was recovered.

Miss Winona Bailey Escapes With Life as If by Miracle.

FALLS SEVENTY-FIVE FEET INTO AN ABYSS

Gets Lost, With Party of Mountain Climbers, on Mount Olympus While Retreating, Exhausted, and Almost at Camp.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
 Seattle, Aug. 16.—Miss Winona Bailey, a teacher in the Everett schools, who went to the Olympics with the Mountaineers' club, lies in camp in Elwha basin suffering from the effects of a fall over a 75-foot precipice of ice and snow, while endeavoring to climb Mount Olympus.

That Miss Bailey is not dead seems little short of a miracle. The party of which she was a member had spent several hours in the ascent of Olympus. They had almost reached camp when a heavy mist was encountered. The little party became lost for a time. Instead of going down the glacier which the larger party had ascended, they started toward a precipice of ice and snow. Miss Bailey stumbled and fell and in a moment was over the cliff.

When she was picked up it was found that no bones were broken and she had sustained no serious internal injuries. A temporary hospital was improvised and she is now under the care of Dr. Cora Smith Eaton, a member of the party.

Aside from this one accident the trip was the most successful the club has ever undertaken. Every peak of importance in the Olympics was scaled, with the exception of Olympus itself. A score or more of the Mountaineers remained behind for the express purpose of scaling Olympus. The rest have returned to Seattle.

BOX CAR JUMPS AT BLODGETT STATION

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
 Albany, Or., Aug. 16.—A small wreck occurred on the line of the Corvallis & Eastern running from Yacoma to Albany yesterday noon. Traffic was delayed for a short period and the regular passenger train from that place did not reach Albany until about 4 o'clock. A box car jumped the track and a wrecking crew was immediately sent to the scene of the wreck at Blodgett. There were no serious injuries to anyone.

Hundred and Fifty People Gathered About North Beach Bonfire—Two Women Badly Hurt.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
 North Beach, Wash., Aug. 16.—An unfortunate accident occurred at Long Beach last night and two women whose names could not be learned were quite seriously hurt. An immense bonfire had been built on the beach and a large box of fireworks had been brought down. The intention was to set these off later in the evening. The box containing the fireworks was set too near the beach and the result was a terrific explosion. Two women were badly hurt by the explosion of a roman candle directly back of her ear. Over 150 people were about the bonfire, but fortunately but few were hurt.
