Phrase That Is Expected to Lay the Third Term Spectre Entirely.

IS GOING RIGHT TO THE PEOPLE WITH IT

Hails Himself as Deliverer of a Poor Promise-Bound President Who Would But May Not, and as Solver of People's Alleged Riddle.

(Washington Bureau of The Journal.) Oregon and his "second elective" discovery of a way out of the Roosevelt a third-term impasse, as follows:

tinutus his political machinations to kee Mr. Roosevelt for another four lakes it seriously, too; so seriously that he has refused to go far away from Washington during the interim of congress. He came into the senate March 4 last, and with his entrance he got busy on his plans for a "second elective" term proposition. He associated with him "Bull" Andrews, delegate from New Mexico, and several other statesmen, and they have since been doing many things that would interest the public could it all be told. Senator Bourne and Delegate Andrews attended the dinner where the $5,000,000 conspiracy was revealed by some befuddled guest. It was these two who stood manfully by the White House following the days when the story, with all its horrors, was made public. Every day they visited either the president or Secretary Loeb, and they kept it up until Loeb began to get uneasy. Long after the president had gone to Oyster Bay Senator Bourne, who had remained in Washington—caring nothing for his far-away Oregon homeoften went to the White House, whether out of sheer force of habit or for the purpose of communicating by long distance telephone with Oyster Bay is not known. The supposition is he was reporting the results of his canvass of the situation.

Third Term? Oh, Mo, Mo!

Third Term? Oh, No. Hol

Senator Bourne still maintains, with an earnestness and enthusiasm that is remarkable, that there is nothing else in sight but the "second elective" term. No third term. Horrors! No. The people might shy at that. But they would not be frightened with the "second elective" idea.

Reports from Deer Park are that the Oregon senator is hard at work there on his scheme to rope the president and throw him into the "second elective" chair. He has his private secretary and an extra stenographer filling the mails with inquiries about prospects and suggestions as to organization. He and suggestions as to organisation. He is hearing from the people direct from their hearts, and he sees nobody but Roosevelt in the White House during Roosevelt in the White House during the next four years.

It is not Senator Bourne's intention to go far away from Washington until the whole thing is settled. He proposes to be on the ground early in November to watch the conspirators as they merge from the shadows and begin to distribute the $5,000,000 among the defiled. In the senate especially he will keep his eye on Penrose and the others who are reported to be still hankering for an opportunity to use a keen blade on Roosevelt aspirations for four years more. In the house Delegate Andrews will perform a similar duty.

WIRES TO INTERLACE IN FOREST RESERVE

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) many set and the wire is now at Hilgard. The six men who made the six-foot trail to North Powder lakes are cutting out the right-of-way for the line.

This line runs from Starkey to Cableville, where it is to connect with the Pacific States line. There will be several connections with private lines, one from Starkey to Hilgard and one from Fly Vailey to Lehman Springs, thence to Pendleton. North Powder comes in on fhis labyrinth of wires by way of the private lines from the mines, one from the Muir, or North Star, mine now being put through by J. W. Messner, manager of the Indiana. The wire for the 12-mile line from Sheep Ranch or Sheep Creek to the Aurelia is now here at the depot.

State Control of Servants.

novel solution of the domestic servant problem is the proposal that house hold helps should become state servants just as much as postmen are,

Mrs. Havelock Eilis made the suggestion in a lecture recently at Kensington, London. She would establish a servanta' office in every town and village -just like the postoffice-where domesne obtained as they are wanted.

They should be certificated and paid accordingly; those who did the most manual work should receive a higher slavery, and cannibalism," said Mrs. Havelock Ellis. "The domestic help, that friend of the family has disappeared, and in her place is one who has suffered under conditions of snobbery and class prejudice."

Now there comes another suggestion along these lines. A syndicate has been formed in Berlin to build flats and equip them with a common kitchen and a common saff of assistants.

When you want a meal you will merely order it to be sent up in a dumb waiter, as you might in a restaurant.

If you are displeased with the way in which the assistant sent to you by the mysterious, invisible syndicate, opens the front door, you will merely telephone down to them and inform them that you want another. And another will be supplied at once.

How the syndicate is to secure assistants is not stated, but that need not trouble us at this distance.

Wedding Flowers.

A change from the usual bouquet or posy is sometimes achieved by providing the bridesmalds with floral wands or staffs, and very effective they are. The staves being enamelled white, any suitable flower looks well with them. Seen lately were pink and red roses tied in a bunch, their stalks being allowed to show, with a large Empire bow of pink ribbon. A bow of silver gauze or ribbon is also effective with the white enamelled staff.

A new method of decking the favorite marriage symbol, the wedding bell, was lately adopted. The bell itself was of silver gauze, which possesses the advantage of lightness and brilliancy, doing away with the somewhat ponder-ous appearance of the old style of floral ous appearance of the old style of floral bell—a framework completely studded with blossoms. The mouth of the bell was fringed with lilies-of-the-valley, while immediately above them was fixed a band of white deutzia. Upon the dome three fine sprays of Harrissi lilies and lilies-of-the-valley were fastened, and tied with knots of stout silver cord. The clapper or tongue of the bell is made of a ball of sweet-scented orange blossom, while strong silver cords attach the bell to a convenient overhead support, the two ends hanging down to represent the bell ropes by which the joyous wedding chimes are rung.

. . . Midsummer Styles.

In all of the muslin frocks, says writer in Dress, no matter how complicated or elaborate the design, there is that suggestion of simplicity which stands for elegance wherever it appears; a feature that the French modistes have caught to a perfection not yet attained by our American dressmakers, although they are rapidly approaching it. While these mousselines and organdles and fabrics of similar ilk are made up over slik, it is no longer considered a necessity. Sometimes, in fact—and the idea is a very pretty one—the figured organdle is worn over a muslin petticoat or drop skirt of quite a different shade even from that shown in the printed figures, as, a rose sprayed frock over a pale, soft green, which, over an undermuslin of deep cream takes on a wonderfully charming effect that is quite indescribable. Radium, chins, and all the thin oriental silks are cool and dainty for summer avenings if one prefers them to the organdles. The skirt is plain or shirred at the waist, with flat trimmings of lace insertion put on these mousselines and organdles and
