

GLOWING TRIBUTE PAID WIFE OF STEVE ADAMS

Mrs. Clarence Darrow Goes Into Ecstasies Over Splendid Characteristics Found in Woman Who is Life Partner of Notorious Miner.

One woman's tribute to another was pronounced at the Portland hotel Saturday night by Mrs. Clarence S. Darrow, wife of the famous attorney who defended Haywood in his trial for the assassination of Ex-Governor Steuneger. Her praise of Mrs. Annie Adams, wife of the notorious Steve Adams, was without stint and concerned the splendid characteristics found by Mrs. Darrow in the little woman who won the respect and admiration of Idaho which extended even to the attorneys who appeared for the state.

"I found Mrs. Adams, a true type of the mine's wife," said Mrs. Darrow. "Unapproachable to strangers, she quickly warms in friendship as she learns to trust an acquaintance. When at last I knew her—learned the strong womanly instincts that belong to her, and a lovable, sensible, decent, staunch woman, who is sacrificing everything worthily for her husband and the Western Federation of Miners. She seemed suspicious.

"When I first met Mrs. Adams, I did not like her. She seemed suspicious of me and afraid of anything about herself, her husband, or the federation. In fact, she almost absolutely refused to talk for fear she might say something that would hurt Steve Adams' case. Another thing about her was her dress. She was attired in an old black skirt and shabby hat that made her appearance anything but attractive. The next time I saw her a complete transformation had taken place. She was dressed in the neatest tailor-made dress I saw in Idaho. Then she told me about it. Friends had gone to her and said that her appearance might hurt Steve's case and urged her to get new clothes. She is a living in the money furnished by the federation and is as economical as a person can be and live. Instead of taking the money they offered her and buying an expensive dress, she asked for $10 with which to buy cloth and made that stunning tailor-made suit herself, from a pattern she had made.

"From that time on all was changed. She never appeared in any clothing but added to her personal appearance. She went to Boise, Mrs. Adams washed clothes for other people to make her living, although the federation wanted to give her money all the time. But she is not that kind of a woman. She is honest with herself and with everybody else. Her good common sense carried her through many trials in which her courage never faltered. "Just at the close of her husband's trial, she received a telegram from her sister stating that her mother was dying and her presence was imperative immediately. There she was, worrying and anxious over her husband's fate and waiting for the verdict which meant his life or death. Yet she knew she must go to her mother's deathbed. She visited Steve in the jail, bade him good-bye with all the affection a true wife has for her husband and left to pack her clothes to go to her mother. She was the only one in the house who accepted the matter philosophically. Others about her were in tears, but she realized her duty and faced it bravely. Just as she was finished with her packing, another telegram came announcing an improvement in her mother's condition and her presence would not be necessary.

All Are Hounded by Sleuths. "Then woman-like she gave way. You may think these acts of this poor, ignorant woman were matter of fact and commonplace. They were, but to one who has never lived in the midst of the miner's life, a true appreciation of what they have to contend with can never be reached. "The miners, their wives and even their children are hounded by sleuths and detectives to get something—even a little word, that will help in the prosecution and conviction of members of the federation. Their very steps are dogged and they are watched like wild animals that roam the forests and plains.

"Is it any wonder they have become silent, morose and suspicious to the rest of the world? They have been libeled criminals. They have been characterized and classed as untrustworthy citizens because they refuse to talk to these sleuths and detectives who are eager to twist and turn their words into something that will help them make a favorable report to the men who are employing them. It is the business of the detectives to do this, that their jobs may last as long as possible. And the miners and their families, steeped in ignorance, but wholesome and good in the main, with lovable family relations, must suffer the results of their libelous occupation.

"Mrs. Annie Adams never lost her courage, her womanliness, her gentility, or her common sense, and when she was placed on the witness stand told a clear, straightforward story that baffled the keenest cross-examination of the most skillful lawyers in Idaho. She was able to do it because she spoke the truth, because she was honest and because she loved her husband, for whom she would put her neck in the noose, if it were to save his life and vindicate the federation.

Mrs. Darrow came to Portland Saturday to meet Mr. Darrow yesterday. She received a telegram however from Mr. Darrow dated at Spokane asking her to meet him in the Washington city and left for Spokane last night to join him.

Amendment to Factory Acts Being Discussed By Organized Labor.

(Journal Special Service.) Bath, England, Sept. 2.—All of the staple topics interesting organized labor and several new subjects are included in the program for the fortieth British Trade Union congress which began here today. Among the resolutions to be submitted are a number dealing with amendments to the factory acts for the benefit of various trades. On behalf of the National Federation of Blast Furnace Men a resolution will be proposed protesting against the class prejudice displayed and anti-democratic policy pursued by the educational authorities, and demanding that the highest and most efficient form of secondary education be free and available to all children capable of taking advantage of it. The congress will be asked to "assert its approval of the principle of a universal eight-hour day in all employments, with the object of preventing undue strain upon the physical and mental capacity of the workers. The dockers' union urge the affirmation of the principles of arbitration and conciliation, both voluntary and compulsory, in trade disputes. The establishment of a labor daily newspaper will be proposed to the congress by the London society of compositors. Today's proceedings of the congress were only formal. The mayor of Bath welcomed the delegates and in the afternoon the visitors went sightseeing. The serious business of the congress will begin tomorrow.
