

Durable Satisfactions.

With the whole world hunting for happiness, pursuing it madly in the race for wealth or position or success, and with all the false propaganda which alternately engage the attentions of the luman family, a word from a wise, road thinker on the subject is worth heeding. President Charles Eliot, in an request for the same. ddregs before Abbott college, Andover,

Massachusetts, said:

"The great source of durable satisfaction in life is the home which the woman creates, which she illumines and blesses. It is the joy of children and grandchildren, the joy of that intimate and tender relation of one to one, which is Emerson's definition of happy arriage. These are for educated as for uneducated women the source of the chief durable satisfactions of life. They are the noblest of human satisfactions, the most essential to the continuance of the race, to its continued development of civilization, in love, in good will, in freedom and in justice.

"And in the home the woman brings "And in the home the woman brings into play not only her loving nature, her cheerfulness, her brightness, but all her intellectual faculties and all her acquired skill. She is teacher as well as mother. She teaches the fundamental lessons of life, the first lessons and the last. She teaches the little child how to walk. She teaches the men, and swan the old men how to live and how how to walk. She teaches the men, and even the old men, how to live and how to die. She exhibits all the three fundamental virtues—faith, hope love—and these she applies in the daily life of the old and the young about her. She teaches through love. She has accepted the great improvement in modern education, the abandonment of force, the abandonment of the idea of implicit obedience from children. She accepts the new thought that the thing to be the new thought that the thing to be done with the child, or a man is to de-velop in him or her, not obedience, but self-control."

Naming the Baby.

Apparently naming the baby is a matter of some consideration and formality in other parts of the world as in America, although here in selecting the name the wishes of both parents are usually followed as far as possible. Probably the baby in later life often wishes that this were not so, and that, like the poor little Chinese girls, it might simply be numbered 1, 2, 3, as the case may be, until it reaches years of discretion and chooses a name to suit itself.

Japanese children are nameless un-til they are 5 years old, when the choice of nomenclature rests entirely with paterfamilius.

Hindoo mothers name their offspring the end of 12 days, and then usually ll them by a flower name. A pretty gyptian custom is to light three Egyptian custom is to candles, naming each after a god or some exalted personage. The child is caled after the 'lucky' candle which

The Mohammedan father and mother each write the choice of a name on a slip of paper and place both in the Koran. Whichever slip is first drawn names the child. Chinese boys are named temporarily until their fathers give them a permanent one when they are 20 years old.

One woman has a batch of doughnut mixture on hand all the time, and if company should come unexpectedly, all company should come unexpectedly, all she has to do is fry a few doughnuts, which seems no trouble at all when they are all mixed.
