THE PLAY.

"Better three hours too soon than one minute too late," was the motto adopted by Mr. Ford, the jealous husband in the "Merry Wives of Windsor" at the Hellig last night, and by following this motto Ford caused himself and Sir John Falstaff much misery and the other people of the play and the audience much joy.

So he went again and compared them with the old reprobate's heart against the flattery of the thought that he was loved by a pretty woman.

Three greater rascals than Bardolph, Nym and Pistol, the pickpockets upon whom Falstaff depends for a livelihood, would be hard to find, and the portrayal of these characters by C. D. Burt, J. Arthur Young and Kraft Walton is finished and highly entertaining.

By making love to them, Falstaff sees an opportunity to reach the purses, and presses his suit with much fervor. Letters of love are sent to the two women, who meet and compare them and then lay plans for revenge on Falstaff.

Through all the comedy of the play are two seasons of value; one to Falstaff and the other to Ford, who is as jealous as could be expected of a man who is told of the amusements of his wife, has an appointment to visit his wife, Ford has this experience twice, and his efforts to find Falstaff with Mrs. Ford add much to the amusement of the play.

Dame Quickly, impersonated by Eugenia Webb, does some pretty acting in persuading Falstaff that the punishment he receives at the home of Ford is entirely accidental and much against the wish of Mrs. Ford. W. Chrystie Miller as Justice Shallow, Frank Peters as Mr. Page, and W. C. Andrews as Hugh Evans, the parson, are good in their task of amusing Ford for his jealousy.

The merry wives, who are Aphie James as Mrs. Ford and Anne Schaefer as Mrs. Page earned much well deserved applause. The company is well rounded out, all parts being well played throughout the five acts leading up to Falstaff's exposure. "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be repeated at the Hellig tonight, tomorrow matinee and tomorrow night.
