A trough of low pressure overlies the intermountain states and a large high pressure area is central over the lower Missouri valley. The Lake Huror storm has disappeared at sea off the New England coast. On the Pacific slope the weather is unsettled and the temperatures are above normal, but no rain of consequence has yet fallen. In the middle west clear weather prevails with unusually low temperatures and light to heavy frosts occurred this morning throughout the Missouri and is falling.

The indications are for showers in this district during the next 36 hours.
