CLAIRVOYANTS AND PALMISTS

The Mystery of Life

"They who walk only by sight do not walk by faith, because faith reaches beyond human vision and firmly grasps things unseen."

Life is a mystery—a vast, complicated, profound mystery. Behind us is the irrevocable past, fast fading away, like receding waves broken upon the shores of time. Before us lies the unknown and unexplored future—a future so pregnant with doubts and perplexities—a future along whose pathway are hidden pitfalls, concealed quicksands, and rugged rocks beneath treacherous waves. Can we shun these as we go blindly groping our way? We cry aloud for light, and the echoing answer to our plaintive wail repeats our question. We look around us upon the wide ocean of time and we see it strewn with wrecks—some financial, some social and some physical. Misfortune seems to be the common heritage of man. There is no class or sect that can claim exemption or immunity from these disasters—they are incidental or accidental to all.

Human life is made up of a multiplicity of interests and ever and anon there comes a time to every mortal when in bitterness of spirit it has cried, "Would that I had warning ere this came to pass." There are none spared these trials of patience, though some by a greater mental endowment and higher gifts avoid for a time the pits into which fall those less favored.

The Future Can Be Told

Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer and Darwin have labored to throw a scientific light upon the primal microcosm, but their works have only tended to entangle into more intricate meshes the doubts of those who are honestly seeking for the truth. But, be that as it may, are we not more concerned about the future than the past? One is irrevocable, the other is uncertain, perplexing. One we wish to forget, while we are always longing for some insight into the future. It is the future that has puzzled the minds of all people of all ages, and the spirit of inquiry that arises in everyone's mind cannot be hushed or stifled. It was seen and satisfied in the early days of prophecy, in the oracles and soothsayers of the middle ages, and is proved by the astrologist and psychologist of the present time. The dismembered fragments of empires, kingdoms and principalities drifting down the stream of human history solemnly and sublimely proclaim in their utter desolation the inexorable truths that fell from the lips of priest and prophet.

"Clairvoyants are but the oracles of an unapprehended and inscrutable inspiration, the mental mirrors upon which are reflected the shadows of coming events."

Clairvoyance is not an acquired gift, but a scientific innate faculty, which is as a star projecting its light along the path of its possessor. When the powerful persuasive occult faculty is enthroned in the brain, its index and influence is in close relationship with the talent of the medium, enabling him to readily observe mental intricacies in solving difficult problems.

Ignorance leads to profanation, and men are prone to ridicule what they do not properly understand. The great underdrift of thought in this world trends to one goal; and within human credulity—call it human weakness if you will—is a power phenomenal for apprehending the great truths of existence.

The moment we attempt to analyze, the palpable and apparently potential facts upon which so many try to build disappear beneath the surface like a foundation upon quicksand, or fade from the vision like the mirage in the glowing desert.

Clairvoyance antedates history, and in times past kings and potentates have consulted the oracles to learn the outcome of momentous events.

Sacred History Has Its Prophets

Isaiah was the prince of prophets. He was graphic in his delineation and his prophecies were fully and amply verified. Saul, in his desolation and desperation turned to the woman of Endor. She called up Samuel from the dead and from him Saul learned of his doom for the coming morrow; and so in every age and among every civilized nation there have been a few who have possessed a mysterious and incomprehensible mental flash light that has blazed along the tracks of the future like a radiant meteor, enabling its possessor with psychological accuracy to see events and predict their ultimate results, warning others of threatened danger, that they may so govern themselves to avoid it. That some do possess these marvelous powers has ceased to be a question with those who have been sufficiently honest to investigate and learn the truth. It is a strange phenomenon, but those who possess these gifts (for gifts they must be) can no more explain them than can those who witness their mysterious demonstration. The mind of such a person seems to project far beyond the natural, the material, to the spiritual, the supernatural. The veil of the future is lifted and they look away beyond the present into its mysterious depths. They can see its lights and its shadows, its pitfalls and its pleasure grounds, and are therefore enabled to warn one how to escape the dangers and disasters that beset our daily pathway. Their advice saves from financial wreck, from social ruin, physical decay and premature death.

Caesar's Death Foretold

Did not the soothsayer warn Caesar against the danger that threatened him on the ides of March? But Caesar did not heed it. So he fell, in the senate chamber in the capitol at Rome, a victim to the assassin's dagger. Go down the list and you will find many truly great men who had faith in those who possessed this mysterious power. The records of the misty past show success to those who followed, while disaster came to those who heeded not such warnings.

Napoleon Had His Soothsayers

The great Napoleon of France, the military wonder for all ages, a man whose giant intellect seemed to be capable of grasping all subjects, who crowned and uncrowned kings at his own sweet will, whose victorious eagles fluttered in the capital of almost every power of Europe, was at the time of his most brilliant successes heeding the counsel and advice of his faithful soothsayer or astrologist. And so long as he listened to him his armies marched unchecked over Europe. Napoleon was told that his star of empire would rise above the field of Austerlitz like a blazing meteor, and that it would poise in midday splendor above Friedland, and that the crown jewels of France would lend luster to his brow, but when he was planning his campaign for Russia he was counseled not to undertake it. "If you do," says his faithful monitor, "your star of destiny will sink in a sea of fire and blood and you will die in exile." The burning of Moscow and Napoleon's disastrous retreat is told upon the historic page in eloquent yet awful words. The finale came in his rock-ribbed prison at St. Helena. Napoleon was drunk with power and ambition, and he believed himself omnipotent. He was warned that thus far and no farther could he go. His life is the illustrious example of all. We can get still nearer home with positive proof to illustrate this faith in the occult and mysterious power.

Abraham Lincoln Was Warned

Abraham Lincoln, our martyred president, believed in the knowledge of the clairvoyant, and it is said that this confidence often led him to seek counsel and advice from them. It is a fact that he was fully warned by one not to attend the theatre in Washington the night he was shot, and had this advice been heeded, in all probability his life would have been spared and John Wilkes Booth would not have been an assassin.

Never before in the history of occult science has a man of Melvin's professional standing consented to place his services at the disposal of the public for such a nominal consideration. Realizing that this city has been overrun with pretenders, and that many of its best citizens are anxious to visit a genuine clairvoyant, Melvin has decided to place his consultation fee within the reach of all.

Merit brings its own reward, and Melvin is the only clairvoyant who has ever been in Oregon whose merit has been rewarded by the confidence, patronage and respect of the entire community.

Every procedure is definite and exact, and the result is certain. If you have already made a mistake, thrown away your money, and lost confidence through dealings with much-advertised and self-styled clairvoyants and their cheap, clap-trap methods, start from the beginning and consult Melvin. He will tell you frankly your condition and what you may expect. If nothing can be done for you he will not take one cent of your money.
