In the olden days when good Hamelin town was overrun with a plague of the genus Mus there was a certain individual who has passed down into history as the Pled Piper, who tooted his fife with such werd effect that all the rodents followed him, even as the modern small boy does the band, until the heartless musician had led his the heartless musician had led his squeaking chorus out to their graves squeaking chorus out to their graves in the briny deep.

In these modern days science has taken the place of the musical pedestrian and ravaging rats are sent to their doom by means of the unwise appetite route. Andy Boesle, 223 Yamhill street, however, has decided to place his trust no longer in science, but to go back to the more primitive but more effective club. The following letter from him sent to The Journal, after having experimented with a sure cure for rats is self-explanatory:

self-explanatory: To the Editor of The Journal-In self-explanatory:

To the Editor of The Journal—In these times when every householder and tenant ought to kill as many as possible of these obnoxious vermin—rats—many preparations and ways are offered to the public, some good and others bad. Among those offered to the health officers is one sold by Parke, Davis & Co., Detroit, Michigan, called Azoa.

Having bought a bottle of it, I followed the directions carefully, and was astonished to find that instead of exterminating the rats they seem to be thriving on the stuff. They not only like it, but it looks as if it attracts others. After using it I have more rats now than formerly. I give my experience to the public in order to warn others from investing in a preparation that is worse than useless. Money is none too plenty nowadays to be thrown away.
