SWINDLER AMERICA IS YALE LEADS FINDS MANY UNPREPARED HARVARD ON E. Z. MARKS FOR BATTLE THE GRIDIRON

St. Louis Bunco Artist Fleeces Portland Trust Company of $2,500—Business Men Fall Easy Prey to Winning Smile.

"Farmer" Bennett Deposits Checks, Then Buys East Side Property — Forged Name of Railroad Official for $10,000.

With no other asset than his winning smile and his general air of being a simple and open-faced rustic, J. H. Bennett, of St. Louis, secured from the Portland Trust company of this city $2,500 on several checks and bamboozled a score of the most prominent merchants in Portland.

Bennett has just been arrested in St. Louis, where he is well-known, and is said to have many influential friends. He will be brought to Portland at once to stand trial on a charge of having forged the name of Charles S. Clarke, vice-president of the Missouri Pacific railroad to checks aggregating nearly $10,000.

Local Here in August.
The local office of the Pinkertons and the American Bankers Protective association have been working on the case since last August, when Bennett first appeared on the scene in Portland. They have traced him all over the country and finally located him in St. Louis, where he is well known as a gambler and ward politician.

Superintendent Otto Kasper, of the Pinkertons, received notice today that Bennett had been arrested and a warrant was secured here at once. It is probable that Mr. Clarke will come here to prosecute the case against Bennett.

Bennett, dressed in bucolic fashion, wearing a celluloid collar, neat, but "seedy" clothing, and with the general air of a prosperous farmer, blew into Portland August 10.

Mr. Carter was delighted and completely taken in by the bluff and honest manners of his new found friend and took him over to the cashier where Bennett deposited for collection a check for $1,000 drawn on the St. Louis National bank.

Rear Admiral Mason Says United States Must Order War Materials Abroad as Home Manufacturers Are Too Busy.

Chief of Ordnance Asks for Two Hundred Torpedoes and Says Ten Times That Number Would Leave the Navy Inferior to Others.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Washington, Nov. 23.—The general unpreparedness of the United States for war, its dependence upon foreign manufacturers for its war material, and its serious defects in armament and equipment of battleships was exposed by the annual report of Rear Admiral N. F. Mason, chief of the naval bureau of ordnance, published today.

The admiral regards it as "absolutely necessary" that congress should authorize the secretary of navy to make purchases of war material abroad. The navy would have to purchase at least 100 more torpedoes abroad, while the home manufacturers were completing their present contracts.

It may be necessary to get a certain number of armor-piercing projectiles and range finders abroad. The rifles and machine guns in the navy are reported to be rapidly wearing out. The report also recommends that an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purchase of modern torpedoes and the minimum which should be considered is $200,000. It is pointed out that the navy has hardly placed the United States on an equality with certain nations of supposed inferior naval power.

UNION PACIFIC WILL GO TO COAL FIELDS

(United Press Leased Wire.)
North Yakima, Wash., Nov. 23.—According to authentic information the Union Pacific is to make a new start towards the coal fields of Cowlitz Pass and the rich agricultural lands of the inland empire. The Union Pacific holds seven sections of coal lands at Union Gap and six sections in the valley below and these measures are said to have been proved both as to extent and quality. With this object in view the railroad by the Union Coal and Fuel company, has completed the grading of many miles of road from Centralia to reach Hanford.

The decision of the Union Pacific to reach Cowlitz Pass has resulted in activity in a similar direction by other roads.

Wearers of Blue Threaten to Repeat Dose Handed to Crimson Annually For Past Six Years—Six to Nothing in First Half.

Harvard Men Dejected and Fear Defeat Will Result in Calling Off Further Battles With Their Enemies at Sport.

First Half—Yale 6, Harvard 6.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 23.—Like the mighty force of battle, wild cheers burst forth from the 46,000 throats as the Harvard and Yale eleven marched on the gridiron at the Stadium this afternoon to meet in a football battle royal—the climax of the intercollegiate season. The deafening din kept on uninterrupted while the young giants passed the ball around, lumbered up preparatory to the great struggle and examined the grounds carefully.

Never before was enthusiasm more rampant at any athletic contest. Harvard supporters yelled almost with the desperation of vanishing hope. The representatives of the Cambridge university have not been victorious against Yale on the gridiron for five years and there has been talk that the blue may decline another contest in the event of an overwhelming victory today.

Harvard students easily led in the cheering and first Yale fully appreciating the value of this encouragement to her players, joined in the lung race, and pandemonium was let loose. Such a scene, to be witnessed but once a year, and at this place and time. The rivalry has never been more intense, nor the feeling pitched to a higher level than this year, and the sight just before the line-up was one of the most inspiring, ever brought before human eyes since football games became a national event and the whole country caught the football fever.

Crimson Against Blue.
No prettier panorama than the great athletic spectacle presented today was called was ever before seen. The great tiers of seats completely surrounding the field were packed with shouting enthusiasts, many of whom had traveled hundreds of miles to witness the contest. The crimson banners of Harvard and the blue of Yale waved on the flagpoles and every man, woman and child staffed and dignified by the display of same color.

The beauty show at a football game is always as attractive as the game itself. Today the array of pretty faces was finer than ever. Scintillating girls were everywhere about the stadium, filling all sections of the grandstands, waving ribbons, handkerchiefs and banners as their strident voices shouted for the colleges whose colors they wore and for the lions who were to represent them on the field. The Yale girls wore violet on their waists and the Harvard girls wore red roses and cyanthems.

Stalwart youths, sweet-faced maidens, old folks, young folks, all were so fortunate enough to secure tickets, were on the grounds long before the referee's whistle blew. Harvard soon divided with their friends the entire western side of the huge stadium. Yale was opposite, just across the field.

The New England colleges were all well represented in the great throng. The sympathies of Wellesley always are for some unaccountable reason, strongly with Yale, and they were not less so this year. Nearly all the Wellesley girls came to the game with Yale men and sat on the Yale side of the field. The Smith and Vassar college girls were largely under the tutelage of Harvard students, and they brought their influence to bear for the crimson.

It is the most important battle of the outbreak of the rebellion. The loyalists are in pursuit, cutting down the stragglers and preventing the main body from rallying.

DEMISE OF SANBORN IS MYSTERIOUS

Joint Founder of Sanborn, Vail & Co. Dies at Apartments in Los Angeles—Seems to Have Been Worried for Several Weeks.

Autopsy Will Be Held This Afternoon to Discover Whether He Became Insane From Brooding or Died From Natural Cause.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Los Angeles, Nov. 23.—Mystery surrounds the death of Adoniram J. Sanborn, the 80-year-old florist and joint founder of the firm of Sanborn, Vail & Co. of Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland, who yesterday was found dead in bed in an apartment house on Central avenue.

The aged man had not been seen about the house since last Monday. The landlady of the house became suspicious, and yesterday broke into the room. There were no marks of injury upon the body when it was found.

Sanborn's life was nearly as strange as his death. He is said to have been exceedingly eccentric, living the life of a recluse.

He appeared to be greatly worried during the last few weeks and, fearing that he would do himself bodily harm he was closely watched by the proprietress of the house. The aged man noticed the careful scrutiny and last week said he preferred to care for himself without any interference.

Whether he became temporarily insane from constant brooding, or whether his death was from natural causes will probably be brought out at the autopsy, which will be held this afternoon.

Meanwhile the officials are trying to locate some of the relatives of the deceased, with a view to settling the estate. A. H. Vail, 351 Mission street, San Francisco, and Thomas Stevenson of the same city, are executors.

PISTOLS CRACK IN NORTH END

Four Thugs and Pawnbroker Have Desperate Battle in Which Many Shots Are Fired But No One Is Injured.

Police Do Not Hear Sound of Engagement But After Being Notified by Telephone Conduct Fruitless Search.

A sensational battle with pistols, covering of frontier days, on a well lighted street in the heart of the north end district, between Ben Holman, proprietor of the Maine loan office, 79 Third street, and four murderous thugs, threw the police department into a ferment of excitement at 10:30 o'clock last night.

No casualties resulted from the revolver duel, and despite the fact that 12 shots were fired by the combatants, Chief Grimsborough's vigilant subordinates had no knowledge of the affair until notified by telephone by the pawnbroker.

The circumstances leading up to the shooting affray indicate the desperate character of the crooks infesting that section of the city north of Burnside street, and it is feared, is the signal for the outbreak of an unparalleled carnival of crime.

It was just about 10:20 p. m. that young Holman, who is one of the owners of the Maine loan office, decided to close his place for the night. He accordingly unlocked and bolted one of the doors and was preparing to turn off the lights, when an evil-looking fellow about 22 years of age, wearing a long slouch hat pulled down over his eyes, entered the store.

"Examine Pawbroker's Guns."
"I'd like to see that 38-hammerless in the window," said the stranger, and Holman opened the show window to secure the weapon. After inspecting the gun the man requested the pawnbroker to show him a long blue-barreled Colt's of the same caliber, which was also on display.

After breaking the pistol and magazine Holman returned to the pawnbroker in working order, the thug pulled a handful of cartridges from his pocket and calmly proceeded to load the weapon.

"Don't load that gun," admonished Holman now thoroughly convinced that his customer was a hold-up man. "It will get you."

DR. EVANS BELIEVES MRS. BRADLEY INSANE

Alienist Who Received Thousand Dollars a Day in Thaw Case Will Testify For Nothing For Woman Because He Thinks She Is Deranged.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Washington, Nov. 23.—The defense in the Bradley case is today preparing for a struggle with the insanity experts. Monday. The defense is hopeful of acquittal. The last link in the insanity defense was formed by Shrewsbury, the defendant's uncle, who told the jury that the insanity in the Bradley family.

"We will show that the defendant was crazy," said Powers today. "Dr. Evans, who received $1,000 a day in the Thaw case was so strongly convinced of the defendant's mental condition that he will testify on our side in nothing."

Judge Henry Henderson, who had known Senator Brown 22 years, and who was a witness yesterday, he told of a meeting between Mrs. Brown and the defendant after Brown and his wife had been divorced.

"I talked between the women," said the witness. "When the defendant sought an interview with Mrs. Brown, she was told that she had been divorced. The defendant was dominated by two absolutely incompetent acts of emotion. One was of intense gloom and the other of cheerfulness. When she made of Brown these emotions alternated and she said: 'I am so glad that you are here.'"

Henderson said that he sobbed when he saw the relations between Brown and the defendant. "I was shocked," said the witness. "I was shocked when I saw that Mrs. Brown was intoxicated when she signed the papers, and that the defendant's two boys, but the witness merely said that Brown seemed to be continually angry about something."

Attorney Sam King was recalled to explain the defendant's actions during an interview she had with him. "She returned on the night of October 10, 1907, and I told her that she must give up her relations with Brown," said King. "She returned to the district attorney for the second district of Utah, testified that the defendant was of a generally disposition."

Judge Powers then offered in evidence the defendant's divorce papers. "I was shocked," said the witness. "I was shocked when I saw that Mrs. Brown was intoxicated when she signed the papers, and that the defendant's two boys, but the witness merely said that Brown seemed to be continually angry about something."

RID NORTHWEST OF HINDUS BY SHIPPING THEM TO HAWAIIANS

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Seattle, Wash., Nov. 23.—H. D. Kay, accredited representative of a syndicate of wealthy sugar planters, offers a good living and none too onerous work in a climate altogether congenial, to the few hundred vagrant Hindus who are now doing starvation amidst the fogs and rainstorms of the, to them, inhospitable northwest.

Mr. Kay plans to take all of them he can find to Hawaii with him. Men are needed on the big plantations of Oahu and Hawaii and it is the idea of Mr. Kay that he can relieve Bellingham, Vancouver and Seattle of the inciting cause for further riots and at the same time do a splendid stroke of business for the sugar syndicate whose representative he is.

With this idea uppermost, Mr. Kay has entered into negotiations with different steamship lines to see what can be arranged in the way of transportation from this port to Honolulu.

He also discussed the advisability of his scheme with British Vice-Consul Bernard Kelly and it is understood that Mr. Kelly was quite as encouraging as were the members of the chamber. Having started business at this end of the line Mr. Kay left for San Francisco.
