Bring in the Children to See Toyland and Bearville

This is the Portland store that Santa Claus has chosen as his special agency. He has made us his deputies to ascertain the Christmas wants of Portland children, and to help supply them. It's a Christmas store sure enough, and if you will come to our Fourth floor, alive with the Yuletide spirit, where happy throngs are seeking gifts to make glad the Christmas of their friends, you will share in the enthusiasm you find there. You'll touch elbows with hundreds of others bent on the same mission as yourself, the securing of the best possible gifts for their money, and you'll find hundreds of others who, as wisely as yourself, sought the Olds, Wortman & King store as a logical supply center. The display of dolls, the gaily painted toys, the whir of the mechanical playthings and the smiling faces of the happy children, take those of us who are older back to the days of our own youth when we knew that there was a Santa Claus. There is an added zest to the joy we feel in the Christmas surprises we are planning, and Yuletide takes on a deeper meaning. Do not miss Toyland, for it helps you to realize as nothing else can do the important part that this and many other large department stores display in making Christmas a joyful event all over this broad land of ours.

MEDFORD LETS TRAINS ALONE

Satisfied With the Present Schedules--Deprecates Hostile Agitation.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Medford, Or., Dec. 6.--At its regular monthly meeting last night the Medford Commercial club gave the snub direct to the state railroad commission and voted resolutions championing the Southern Pacific. A letter was received from President M. F. Eggleston of the Ashland Commercial club requesting the assistance and aid of the Medford business men in presenting testimony before the state railroad commission at its hearing next week to force the reinstatement of day-light trains recently taken off. Speeches against participating in the inquiry were made by Southern Pacific Agent Rosenbaum, Attorney W. M. Colvig, who also represents the Southern Pacific; John D. Olwell and Dr. J. M. Keene. It was the general sense of the meeting that the temporary removal of the trains had not injured Medford, especially since a passenger coach had been attached to the last freight, enabling travelers to leave Grants in the evening.

The following resolutions were adopted: "Whereas, The Commercial club has been notified through the press that the Oregon railway commission will visit Medford on the 10th inst. to hear any grievances against the Southern Pacific company, and in particular the train service; "Resolved, That this body notify the said railroad commission that the Commercial club of Medford has no complaints or grievances to present at this time against the said Southern Pacific company affecting this locality or the train service; that it is the sense of this body that the Southern Pacific company is meeting all its demands made by the public as promptly as conditions will permit; and be it further "Resolved, by the Commercial club of Medford, That we are not in accord with the continued hostile agitation against the railroads, but believe they should have the same just support as any other large business interest in the state."

COWS LAUGHED AT PRIMROSE'S DANCE

Tried to Retire but Caught Himself Doing Stunts in Hayloft.

George H. Primrose, a Portland property owner, better known throughout the country as a minstrel man and who, in spite of his 37 years in the roll of a comedian, has a profile greatly resembling that of Sir Henry Irving, the late tragedian, arrived at the Hotel Portland this morning accompanied by his wife. His show, which opens at the Marquam Sunday night for a week came direct from San Francisco. It cost the company $987 to make the jump. "In years to come, when all of the old original minstrel men played the darkey as he was portrayed on the stage 30 or 40 years ago have given their last act and gone to the great beyond, there will be a revival of the songs and dances and jokes such as old timers like myself presented when we first entered the business," Mr. Primrose said this morning. "But this will be many, many years," he added, as he looked reminiscently at the green palms in the lobby which seemed to refresh his memory of his early experiences in his life's chosen profession. "There has been, one might say, an evolution in the minstrel business. We had to keep pace with the times. In doing this the old time stunts have been forgotten, put clear out of business, and something new, novel and original introduced in their stead. It was our fault, in a way perhaps, and then again it was on account of the people. "Retiring Stunt a Joke. "The impersonation of the old-fashioned negro has passed out of present day existence. Those were good old days. God bless them. There is no time like the old--like those when the minstrel man as he acted then, was in his prime. I wish I were going to see those shows revived. But I fear that I never will. "I tried it once," he went on, "and was only away from the footlights six months. I went to my home in Mount Vernon, New York," and tried and imagined that I would be contented. I wasn't. Not even from the first. Within a few weeks I used to find myself out in a way, all alone, doing songs and dances for the benefit of myself and to the horror of the cows and the horses. "King of Dancers. George Primrose has always been known as a dancer. Despite his 34 years and his head, which is sprinkled with gray, he is known as one of the cleverest and most graceful men on his feet in the country. "Mr. Primrose was asked if he ever had any desire to break into tragedy. "Never," he said. "I was born in the minstrel business and will remain until--until I retire, you might say." And then he laughed. He always laughs when he thinks of retiring. "Owner of Portland Property. The minstrel man owns 40 acres on West Portland Heights. This morning he went out to look over his holdings. "I have been paying taxes on this land for some years," he said, "and every time I come here I like to go out there just to see that I am not being cheated. But it's worth the taxes to

ELLIS JOINS FULTON IN FIGHT ON MARGINS

(Washington Bureau of The Journal.) Washington, Dec. 6.--The Ellis bill, drafted by Fulton and introduced at his request, to prevent dealing in corporation stocks on a margin, provides a tax of 5 cents on each dollar face value of stocks bought or sold, unless actual delivery is made. Ellis and Fulton believe that such tax is sufficient to absolutely prohibit margin speculation. The measure is popular among many members of the house. Fulton said he would press the bill at the first opportunity before the committee and later in the senate, if a favorable report is obtained from the committee.
