SCHOLARS IN TROUBLE.

Cambridge Partisans Say They Should Not Represent Oxford.

pointing out what a benefit they were to the dark blue. What has brought about this attack of late in more virulent form was the fact that no less than seven of the Rhodesians distinguished themselves at their studies. In the fall sports of the colleges they have been prominent too. In the recent sports of Hartford college the strange hammer was won by D. T. Her-ring, an American, with a throw of 114 feet. He had a handicap of 40 feet on A. M. Stevens, formerly of Yale, and whose actual throw was 139 feet 4 inches, which is the best performance so far this season. In a recent issue of Sporting Life, "Old Blue" takes a liberal view of the Rhodes scholar controversy as follows: "Everybody must have noticed there is a spirit abroad which, if it does not course another story. The facts remain (a) that the Rhodes scholars are bona fide members of Oxford university, (b) as such they cannot be barred from intervarsity competition, and (c) all the controversy in the world will not alter the position one whit. Frankly speaking, the average Cambridge athlete troubles very little what sort of foeman he has to meet. It is only very few who are now rushing into print and trying to make things unpleasant; which action, I may add, is contrary to all the best Cambridge traditions."
