WEATHER REPORT

A severe storm made its appearance yesterday morning off the Washington coast. It moved rapidly eastward and is central this morning north of Montana. This storm caused general rains on the Pacific slope as far south as San Francisco, and the following high wind velocities: North Head, 84 miles, southeast; Tatoosh Island, 76 miles, south; Walla Walla, 34 miles, south; Lewiston, 32 miles, southwest; Spokane, 26 miles, southeast, and Portland, 26 miles, southwest. Storm warnings for this disturbance were ordered yesterday morning at all coast seaports. A large high pressure area overlies the Atlantic states and fair weather generally prevails east of the Rocky mountains, with temperatures above normal, except in the southern states, where it is cooler than usual.

The indications are for rain or snow and cooler weather tonight or Tuesday east of the Cascade mountains, and for occasional rain in western Oregon and western Washington tonight and Tuesday.
