

STEAMER BRINGS THE COLLECTION

Captain Berndt of the Germanic Possessor of Veritable Museum.

GRINNING SKULLS LINE CABIN BERTHS

Swords and Spears Furnish Evidence of Different Methods of Warfare Among Peoples in Remote Parts of the World.

Captain W. B. Berndt brought to Portland yesterday what is believed to be the greatest private collection of spears, swords and other weapons of warfare in existence in the world today.

Captain Berndt is master of the German steamer Germanic, which arrived here yesterday morning from Sydney, Australia.

A collection of human skulls from the decorations surrounding the skipper's bed and a constant clatter of teeth is heard in response to the rolling of the steamer when in motion.

The sword collection contains specimens from all parts of the dark continent and Oceania, some of them being extremely dangerous because of their poisoned edges.

Captain Berndt knows the history of every article in the collection, and there is not one in the lot without a history and an interesting one at that.

One murderous looking knife has the record of having snuffed out 74 human lives. It was once the property of the official executioner of one of the islands in the Indian ocean.

Kaffir and Hottentot shields and boomerangs from Australia serve to form a variety to the wall decorations and the skins of monster reptiles, alligators and liards form draperies of the ceilings, while the floors are covered with rugs of beasts from the jungles.

The Germanic began loading at the mills of the East and West Lumber company this morning and will remain there probably a week.

She took on 1,500,000 feet of lumber at Grays Harbor and came here for a similar quantity. The cargo is being shipped by the Pacific Export Lumber company.

STORM ALONG COAST.

Steamer Breakwater Gets in Midst of Blow Off River.

The steamer Breakwater, which arrived here last night from Coos bay, was in the midst of the storm off the mouth of the Columbia yesterday morning.

No damage was sustained, however, and the passengers were comfortable. In fact, most of them enjoyed the violent tossing in the disturbed sea.

Chief Officer Peterson, who learned to estimate wind velocity when chief quartermaster of the cruiser Baltimore, said this morning that the wind must have blown from the north when the Breakwater crossed in. He has been mixed up in typhoons and hurricanes of twice the velocity of yesterday morning.

FOR BETTER CHANNELS.

Coos Bay Committee Seek Audience With Government Engineers.

Coos bay merchants are going to fight hard for the improvement of the waterways that lead from the ocean to the various points on the bay.

Colonels Leach and Lockwood are expected here Wednesday, when the committee from the Mansfield chamber of commerce will also be here.

They wish to secure a hearing in order that the desires of the vitally interested people may be understood by means of communications.

In company with Colonel S. W. Roosevelt, chief of the engineer department in this district, the visiting engineers will probably make an extended tour of the Columbia, Snake and Willamette rivers.

NORMAL RAINFALL.

Another Inch of Moisture Will Bring It to Average.

Approximately 2 1/2 inches of rain have fallen here since September 1, 1907, which is about an inch less than the several indications are that within a week or so the average will have been reached or possibly exceeded.

INCREASING TRAFFIC.

Steamer Mountain Gem Adds Trip to Schedule.

Kennewick, Wash., Jan. 20.—Owing to heavy and rapidly increasing traffic between Kennewick and up-river points, steamer Mountain Gem will hereafter make three round trips a week beginning January 21.

DIG DEAL ON FOR LONG TERM LEASE

A Forty-Nine-Year Lease Is Reported to Be Under Negotiation for a Central Downtown Location for the People's Safe Deposit Plant.

PLANT TO BE READY FOR OPERATION ABOUT JUNE 1

What Location Has Been Under Investigation Has Not Been Divulged, But Is Said to Be in One of the New Buildings.

"We have not made a selection yet," said Secretary J. E. McOmber when seen at his office in the Dekum building today.

Several sites are under consideration and these are being investigated with each other. While we expect to have the plant completely installed and in operation by June 1, it is important to secure the best location for the purpose, and that is a matter that has not been definitely decided upon as yet.

It is said that the People's Safe Deposit Company, which is being financed almost entirely by local capital, will install a plant that is thoroughly burglar-proof and fireproof and will have safes and appointments by far the safest, finest and most convenient on the Pacific coast, and will have a capacity for holding about 10,000 boxes.

According to the tradition of landlordism, he could not be blamed for driving hard bargains with his tenants. But Cianricarde, in his dealings with his people, was avowedly actuated less by wise self-interest than by spite and hatred toward men whom he regards as rebels against his feudal rights.

The evicted tenants' bill provided that the government estates commissioners should buy compulsorily every unoccupied farm from which the tenant had been evicted and re-settle on it the former occupants, or their heirs.

The Joker.

But if the farm was already being tilled by a new tenant the act did not apply.

Determined that his victims should never get back to their homes, Cianricarde made provision in advance that he had destroyed his old tenants' homes. He now built new ones and put into each a "planter" generally some poor wretch ignorant of farming, whom his employer had driven to side with landlordism.

The farms "occupied" according to the law, the evicted tenants could not get back to their homes. Cianricarde brought pressure to bear on the "planters," and much to Cianricarde's disgust, they agreed to surrender the land for liberal compensation.

But Cianricarde is not beaten. He now denies that the farms are "occupied" in the meaning of the act of parliament, and he is preparing to fight the point in every court in Ireland and England, rather than let his rebel tenants back to the homes of their fathers.

Fifty-one families of victims of this fight for land reforms are living on the roadside near Woodford, and most of them have been there 20 years. I reached Woodford this morning after a 12-mile drive, during which I had the usual object lesson in landlordism whenever the land was good there were no people, wherever it was bad there was a crowded rural slum.

Miserable Farms.

During the first nine miles of the drive through an excellent green country, I saw not one village, and, indeed, only two human beings. One of them was a policeman. But the barren, heath-clad plateau beyond Woodford town was strewn with closely huddled miserable farms. Here, as everywhere else in Ireland, the bullock has the land, and the peasant has the stones.

Three miles beyond Woodford is "Evicted Village," a cluster of huts by the roadside, with a background of stone mansions. It is a whole generation of Cianricarde's victims has been reared in these huts. The huts are miserable, small, but chiefly of wood, and have one wall and most without even a cabbage patch. But the moment you enter these you can see that the state will bear the other expenses in sending out to the voters of the state. The expense thus put up on the Linn county patrons of Huskisson is considerable, and this together with other necessary expenses will make it quite a burden, therefore I would request that any party willing to assist us in this laudable undertaking send me such amount as he feels justified in doing. Remember this is the Refusals to Take Tenant.

I talked to Stanislaus Burke, who had lived 11 years in Cincinnati, and he told me a story characteristic of Cianricarde. When he returned to Woodford prepared to become an excellent tenant, with American money and American ideas, he applied for his old farm. But hearing that he had evicted him 10 years before, Cianricarde refused to take him. He preferred to leave the farm idle and idle it remained until Burke got it through a family arrangement made without Cianricarde's consent.

Woodford has interesting relics of the first days of a peasant war against landlordism. It created the plan of campaign.

I ate my dinner in the room of O'Reilly's hotel, at the window of which William O'Brien publicly burnt the Lord Lieutenant's proclamation putting Woodford district under the infamous Coercion act.

I visited Seunder's farm, which was held by its tenants for eight days against 500 soldiers and 500 rifles, and saw the holes in the roof through which the Saunders had fought their assailants.

I went here, as everywhere around, I saw traces of landlord devastation, roofless cabins and untilled fields, and worst of all, a tired, listless people, pale shadows of the brave Irish menfolk to whom the light of hope is only now returning.

to shift to Albina dock tomorrow. She is still discharging at Alaska dock. The American bark Acme was towed to the dolphins yesterday to give room at the mills of the Eastern & Western Lumber company's wharf for the German steamer Germanic.
