WEATHER REPORT

There has been little change in the barometer over the Pacific slope and plateau region since this morning, and the relative position of the high and low areas overlying this section of the country remains practically the same. The former overlies this forecast district with center about Spokane, while the latter remains central over the middle California coast. This depression retains its energy, moderate rains having fallen over Central California, Southern Nevada and Utah during the last 12 hours. To the northward of this rain area over Oregon, Washington, Idaho and British Columbia clear skies prevailed. No marked changes in temperature occurred.

The indications are for fair weather in this district Sunday, except in Southern Idaho, where rain or snow is probable.
