

IN THE PATH OF THE FLEET

By Orton E. Goodwin.
ONCE this our fleet has left on its journey south from Rio Janeiro. Doubtless its men have paid affectionate farewells to the American bar, with its now world famed sign, "All nations welcome but Carrie."

Barely a mile or two beyond the entrance to the harbor of Rio there rises precipitously out of the water the Sugar Loaf—a vast mass of rock, apparently unscalable and with its surface dotted with Rio's famed royal palms. The Sugar Loaf will certainly impress and probably receive some little attention for it will likely be the last sight of land the jockies will get for some weary days.

Unless Admiral Evans has the misfortune to have some of his ships struck by pomper—a species of epidemic, very prevalent in the latitudes of Rio de la Plata—the thousands of United States citizens in Montevideo will not have the opportunity, they so ardently desire, of welcoming them.

Montevideo, or Monte, as it is usually called, has immense natural resources. Its harbor is in a sheltered roadstead, the only disadvantage being that ships are compelled to anchor some some distance—two to three miles—from the shore. Rapid launches cover this distance in 15 minutes, landing visitors at a long wide jetty, which makes for the Montevideans an excellent promenade. Close to is a new concrete dock in course of construction which will be able to accommodate, when finished, the largest ships frequenting South Atlantic waters.

Monte is one of those South American places sacred to the revolutionist, and does in fact have a revolution on an average every three years. One is apt to poke fun at South American revolutionists, but a walk through the streets of Montevideo quickly convinces one that the humor is best seen at a distance. Here and there on the sides of fourth city of the world, whilst its population of between 2,000,000 and 2,000,000 makes it the most important city in South America. Argentinians claim that in no city in the world can there be found a more perfect police force and car system, the seven companies governing the latter having 125 different routes. On every block of the important section of the city will be found, on point duty, a policeman senior. This is because of a rather pleasant habit Argentine has of looking up the witness as well as the prisoner until the first hearing of the case. Foreigners, ignorant of this at first, very quickly learn from experience that the police ignorance is the paying one in Buenos Aires.

Pine Boulevards.
The Avenida de Mayo, Buenos Aires' fine boulevard, is like the Avenida at Rio de Janeiro, second to none in the world. Cut out at enormous expense by the government, it at once brought the city up to greater prominence in the commercial world. Here may be found the great stores, restaurants and theatres for which the city is so deservedly noted. Prominent among the stores is the "Swastika"—the great American store, patronized not only by many of the 40,000 English and American residents, but by the native Argentinians as well. American "librerias" or book stores, where all the best known home papers and magazines may be purchased are not uncommon.

During the theatre season operas can be seen performed by excellent companies. The most popular theatres, however, are the vaudeville shows, the vaudeville drawing the best crowd and staging the best shows being strongly reminiscent of the Folies Bergeres at Paris. Indeed much of the later architecture and laying out of the city is after the Parisian model.

The officers of the torpedo flotilla will likely have experienced the joys of a battle of flowers at Palermo park where literally thousands of carriages filled with gay parties of men and women may be seen driving round the spacious lake on any gala night. They are sure to have witnessed up-to-date South America journalism by visiting "La Prensa" magnificent entertaining rooms, which are always placed at the disposal of distinguished foreigners—an opportunity not to be disregarded.

On the whole it is perhaps fortunate that the entire fleet has not called at Buenos Aires—too many of its personnel might have lost their hearts to the lovely Argentine maidens, commonly said to be the most beautiful in the world; but be that as it may, if the flotilla men receive anything like the reception accorded to Secretary Root in 1906—and there is every reason to think they did—Buenos Aires will at least be one of the outstanding memories of the trip.

Montevideo's Fine Cathedral.

the buildings may be seen stone tablets with an inscription in English somewhat after the following: "In memory of William Roberts, an American resident of this city, who, on the first of December, 1905, was here killed by a bullet passing through the body of his intended victim, struck the above."

Excellent Car Service.
In times of peace Monte has an excellent electric car service, yet when the breath of revolution is in the air, the companies prefer to put their old fashioned horse cars on the streets in place of the more modern electric cars—making a scene incongruous in the extreme.

With regard to buildings it is only to be expected that Monte is far behind the times. Yet surrounding the Grand Plaza there are several notable buildings, such as the cathedral, an imposing edifice of York stone. On the opposite side of the plaza may be found the administrative buildings and the official residence of the president. Every evening a fine government band plays in this vast square, the government not unwisely holding the view that by keeping the people amused they keep them from thoughts of revolution, thus incidentally keeping more secure the positions and salaries of the officials.

Some distance up the river Plate and on the other side is Buenos Aires (good air), which is reached from Monte by fast night steamers. Despite the enormous width of the river Plate estuary (land on both sides is usually out of sight from the steamer), it is difficult indeed for the English and American mailboats to find a channel. Any ship drawing over 25 feet would find a passage almost impossible. Up till quite recently Buenos Aires had no docks, but this defect is now well amended and mailboats can have both entrance and exit at all times.

Buenos Aires in point of area is the

GOVERNMENT TO STOP SHANGHAING OF TARS

Kidnapping of Bluejacket by Oyster Crew Arouses Navy Department.

Washington, Feb. 1.—Officials of the navy department have determined to stop the practice of certain oyster dredgers in Chesapeake bay of "shanghaiing" enlisted men of the United States navy and compelling them to work on their ships.

A flagrant case of this kind developed during the recent trial by court-martial of Charles F. Hammond, a seaman apprentice, attached to the receiving ship Franklin, at the Norfolk navy yard, charged with being absent without leave, Hammond, while in Norfolk on shore leave, was drugged and carried aboard the oyster schooner Marion, Marion R. Coleman, master.

Whenever the vessel was in port, Hammond was locked up in the hold; but he finally managed to escape to the shore at Baltimore and made his way back to the Franklin at Norfolk. He had been forcibly detained on the oyster schooner for more than thirty days, and alleged that he had been harshly treated.

At the instance of the navy department, a United States revenue cutter was sent after the Marion and arrested the master, who was taken to Baltimore and held for the action of the grand jury of the eastern district of Virginia, in which the alleged offense was committed. "Shanghaiing" is an offense against the laws of the United States, and the navy department has to secure its enforcement in every case where an enlisted man of the navy is affected.

HELD GUN BARREL IN BRUIN'S JAWS

Prone Rancher Holds Old Ephraim Off Until the Dogs Can Rescue.

Bella Coola, B. C., Feb. 1.—Bears have been numerous this year, but no such thrilling encounter has been recorded as one of Jim Holt with a grizzly a few weeks ago. Holt is recovering and the wounds inflicted on leg and thigh by bruin's teeth are healing well. Jim is one of the Norwegian colony here, and had been out riding. He was nearing home, when the restiveness of his horse and the commotion made by his three dogs convinced him of the presence of bear on the edge of his own clearing.

Hurriedly putting up his horse and priming his rifle, he ran out to find his dogs returning. He urged the dogs off in search, and was about to follow when he became aware that a grizzly had stolen upon him and was ready to attack. Instantly he sprang aside, thrust the muzzle of his rifle to its neck and strove to shoot at the beast buried its claws in his leg and bore him earthward. Striving with all his might to keep the great teeth from him by the pressure of the muzzle on its neck, he tried again and again to shoot, but something prevented a discharge. Then he was thrown and with the hot breath of the maddened beast on his face, he felt that his time had come. With presence of mind, however, he thrust the barrel of his gun across the great jaws and held it there with both hands, calling loudly for his dogs. They came and saved him, for they ran back and worried the thing from behind and thus gave their master opportunity to get to his feet, remove the obstacle from his gun, and thus become richer by so many pounds of bear meat and a valuable skin, before he limped home to have his wounds dressed.

SMELTER KING'S SON WORKS AS LABORER

Goes to Mexico to Learn the Practical Side of the Ore Business.

Agua Calientes, Mexico, Feb. 1.—The many millions of dollars of wealth of Daniel Guggenheim, of New York, head of the smelter trust, are not standing in the way of his son, Harry Guggenheim, in learning the practical side of the smelting business.

Young Guggenheim is working with a gang of poor Mexicans shoveling ore in the bins of the big smelter at this place. He receives the same wages as the Mexicans—one peso per day, which is equivalent to 50 cents in the money of the United States.

It is said that the young man took this position with his father's consent and that he is to work his way up through the several departments of the smelter. After finishing with the manual and mechanical sides of the business he will enter the office and learn how the books and records are kept.

The American Smelting and Refining company, which is usually called the Smelter Trust, virtually controls the smelting of the United States and Mexico. It is said that young Guggenheim is equipping himself so as to be able to succeed his father eventually at the head of the business.

He is 19 years old and is strong and healthy. He came down here in a private car and went to work the next day.

She Declares Monument to Patrick S. Berry Is a Waste of Money.

Trenton, Feb. 1.—Mrs. Clara A. Berry, widow of former Councilman Patrick J. Berry, a wealthy man here at the time of his death, two years ago, today filed in the orphans' court objection to a settlement account with her daughter, Mrs. Clara A. O'Connell, of Chicago, the executrix under the will of her father.

The widow and Mr. Berry were estranged for many years before his death, and she now files objection to a charge of $1,300 for a monument to the memory of her husband, declaring it an unnecessary outlay of wealth. She also objects to the bill for removal
