USED SHIRT FOR SAVINGS BANK

It Was Wrecked, and Olof Olson Says a Barkeep Wrecked It.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 5.—With $80 sewed in one sleeve of his shirt, $180 likewise sewed in the other sleeve and $90 stitched in the back of the garment, Olof Olson, who says he is a road laborer, returned from this planted work, believing his money thus protected would be safe from the cleverest thief. Olson later appeared at police headquarters and a chief bartender, had used a knife to cut the secret money-pockets and that the money had been stolen piecemeal from him. Olson says he began drinking and went to sleep in the Maple Leaf saloon. He had been in the company of Jacobson and others were putting him into the patrol wagon Mrs. Jacobson, with her baby in her arms, seized hold of the hand-rail and attempted to get into the patrol wagon Mrs. Jacobson. Later when he appeared at the city jail and pleaded for his release. Olson says he suspected Jacobson and his pals of robbing him when he awoke and found the $260 missing from the pockets in his case and when he awoke after another nap in a chair and found himself penniless he made up his mind to have Jacobson arrested. When the detectives were putting him into the patrol wagon Olson says he suspected Jacobson and his pals of robbing him when he awoke and found the $260 missing from the pockets in his case and when he awoke after another nap in a chair and found himself penniless he made up his mind to have Jacobson arrested.
