Government Investigates Alaska Highways—Proposes to Improve Roads to Mines of the Far North—Present Stage Routes Maintained at Private Expense and Many Are Roads in Name Only—Washington Alaskan Colony Hopeful

By John E. Lathrop.
(Washington Bureau of The Journal.)
WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—Major V. P. Richardson, Ninth infantry, U. S. A., president of the board of road commissioners of Alaska in Washington, furthering the government's work to provide the northwest country with good highways. Were one disposed to adopt the romantic style of writing, he might easily construct a story of thrilling interest in telling of the major's experiences in Alaska, "mushing" over the trails in the dead of winter, digging himself out of the great snowdrifts which obstruct the way of the government mail carriers, hurrying here and there as news reaches him of difficulties encountered by the mail contractors, looking out the country to devise routes through some of the most inaccessible regions, and enduring almost unbelievable hardships in carrying on the work to which he has devoted his scientific and exhaustive energies.

Across the line in British territory, where the Klondike country, yielding a rich gold-bearing placer ground, with large revenues collected by the Canadian government from the venture-that affect to the secretary of war. The best time from Seattle to Nome was 39 days, and the average time 41 days for the season. It is expected that this time will still further reduce the coming winter. The record time from Valdez to Fairbanks (370 miles) during the season was six days and ten minutes. Much of the credit for the improved services should be given to E. S. Orr, mail contractor in charge of the route between Valdez and Fairbanks, and to the superintendents and carriers along the river and Bering Sea coast who undergo many hardships and occasionally lose their lives in the effort to protect and deliver the mails on time.

The amount accruing to the "Alaska fund" for road and trail construction from taxation in the territory was again supplemented by the congress at its last session by a special appropriation of $250,000. For the construction and maintenance of military and post-roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska, which, with above $90,000 in the regular tax fund at the beginning of the season of summer operations, has carried the largest sum than in any previous year, and a vast amount of work has been done, distributed from Prince of Wales island to the southern Alaska to Kotzebue sound beyond Bering Strait. The board made provisional allotments in the early part of April for the different sections of work determined upon and met in Seattle for this purpose and for the purchase of teams, tools and other equipment, and for the organization of parties for the season's work.

Accompanying his report, he will print pictures such as those which are supplied herewith, to illustrate the conditions encountered in Alaska and to show the progress which has been made. Although Alaskans are disposed to demur from the opinion of the road board's president, that this government has accomplished what might have been expected from it, under the circumstances, they admit that the difficulties there are greater than the uninformed people of the states realize and they concede that in Major Richardson the government has an agent and engineer of indomitable courage, requisite skill, and unquestioned honesty and that, if anyone can carry road building plans to success, he can.

Every winter a large colony of Alaskans are in the national capital and these are found upon inquiry to regard the government's work in Alaska with interest and admiration. They look to him to bring order out of the chaos of lawlessness existing, and to utilize the government's resources in the best possible manner.

WHEN THE EARTH IS DEAD

There Exists No Proper Common Measure of Eternity

By Camille Flammarion.
THE earth was dead. The other planets had died, one after the other. The sun was extinct, but the stars were still twinkling—there shall always be stars and worlds.

In the unmeasurable eternity, time, which is essentially relative, is determined by the movement of each of these worlds, and in each world it is felt according to the personal sensations of their inhabitants. Each globe measures its proper period of time. The years of the earth are not those of Neptune, Neptune's year equals one hundred and sixty-four of ours, and is no longer in the absolute. There exists no proper common measure of time and eternity.

In the empty space time does not exist there are no years, no centuries, but there is a way of measuring time upon a revolving globe. Without periodical movements one can have no conception of time whatsoever.

The earth existed no longer, neither did its celestial neighbor, Mars, nor the beautiful Venus, nor the distant stars, nor the strange universe of Saturn, its rings gone, nor the slow planets, Uranus and Neptune, dark in the time sun, whose rays had for centuries made fertile the celestial countries suspended in its light.

The sun was a black globe, the planets were other black globes, and this starless system continued to course in the cold darkness of space.

From the viewpoint of life all these worlds were dead, existing no longer. They survived their antique history, do the ruins of the dead cities of Assyria, which the archeologist discovers in the desert, and revolved dark in the invisible and unknown. Everything was covered with ice, 73 degrees below zero.

No genius, no sage could have brought back the days of old when earth smiled through space, bathed in light, its beautiful green meadows awakening with the rays of the morning sun, its rivers flowing like serpents through the green fields, its woods reverberating with the songs of the birds, its forests enveloped in majestic mystery.

Then all this happiness seemed eternal. What has become of the mornings and evenings, the flowers and the lovers, the harmonies and joys, the beauties and the dreams? All have disappeared.

The earth is dead, all the planets are dead, the sun is extinct. The solar system gone. Time itself even annihilated.

Time flows into eternity, but eternity remains which time revives.

Before the earth existed, during a whole eternity, there were suns and worlds, humanities filled with life and activity as we are today. For millions and millions of years our earth did not exist but the universe was no less brilliant after our time it was as before—our epoch is of no importance.

The dead and cold earth carried in itself, however, an energy not lost, its movement around the sun, its water transformed into heat would suffice to melt the whole globe, to reduce it to a liquid state, to begin a new history for it, which, it is true, would not last long, for if this movement around the sun should cease, the earth would fall into the sun and cease to exist, it would rush toward it with ever increasing speed and would reach it in sixty days.

When the earth is dead, other worlds will come. There will be other humanities, other Babylons, other Thebais, other Athenians, other Romes, other Paris, other palaces, other temples, other gardens, other lovers, other lights, other stars, other suns.

And these new worlds, to be followed by still others. At a certain time far away in the future eternity, the stars of the Milky Way shall rush toward one center of gravity and form an immense burning sun, a system, where the enormous worlds shall become populated by beings living in a temperature which will be suited to them.

The infinite space shall always be filled with worlds and stars, souls and an eternity shall last forever, for there can be neither beginning nor end.

OREGON POSTOFFICE NAMES ARE QUEER

Origin of "Bakeoven," "Mule," "Sweet Home," "Shake" and Many Other Oddly Named Places Throughout the State

From the New York Sun.
FOR queer names of towns Oregon excels any state in the union. Natural characteristics and freaks of fortune made many names, and the pioneers who settled in this far western state often selected a name for their new location from the first chance occurrence in connection with it.

Indian names and some drawn from the classics appear in Oregon's postoffice list, but predominant are the names indicative of the life of the west. Animals, birds and trees have also contributed their names to settlements.

The part chance has played in forming Oregon's postoffice list is whimsical. In the case of the postoffice at Baker, the name was suggested by the fact that the postmaster, J. F. Mahon, in whose residence the postoffice is located, conducts one of the largest mule ranches in the west.

There is no town at Mule, but the rancher wanted a postoffice. When Mahon, who headed the petition, was asked to select a name he suggested Anderson, as his ranch is in Anderson valley. But the department replied that there were too many Andersons in the country already and a shorter name would be advisable. So Mahon suggested Mule, and it was accepted.

A historic name is Grant's Pass, county seat of Josephine county. When U. S. Grant was a young lieutenant in the regular army he led a detachment of soldiers from California northward through Oregon to Vancouver barracks. In crossing the southern Oregon mountains the soldiers wandered away from the regular trail and found their way down out of the mountains through a new pass. In later years when Grant led the Union armies to victory and became famous his name became associated with this pass, and the city which grew up in the pass to the hills took the name.

In early days the settlers in order to be near wood and water went well back into the hills to take on their land claims, ignoring the rich valley lands, which are now the scene of trade and industry. A party thus seeking new homes found a pleasant little valley in what is now the eastern part of Linn county. Greentree they had found a Utopia so far as natural conditions were concerned, they named their settlement Sweet Home. But though thriving Linn reversed the letters and called it Sweet Home is yet a foothill village.

San Francisco capitalists founded a town near the mouth of the Bluelaw river and thinking they had an ideal location for a sawmill town, both in timber supply and shipping facilities, they named it Acme. It has never attained the dignity of a city.

Andem secured its name in an unusual way. When a postoffice was established in the Quariaville mining district in Linn county, Lawyer the London capitalist who owned the mines, wanted to name it for his friend Medina. But this name was so familiar to Medina, which is only a few miles away, that the postoffice department rejected it. Lawyer reversed the letters and called the postoffice Andem.

Corvallis, county seat of Benton county, is Latin in origin, meaning the valley of the valley. It was originally named Marysville. About 1870 this town and Salem, the capital of Oregon, and Albany, the county seat of Linn county, desired names which were not so common. Marysville became Corvallis, Albany changed to Takamah and Salem became Chemeketa. The first town kept its name, but the latter two soon changed back to the old names.

Billsburg got its name thus: A few years ago only seven men lived there, all being miners and prospectors. They met one evening to choose a name for their settlement and it was then discovered that the first name of all seven of the men was William. That settled it. Naturally, then, it was out twice if the discussion of a name and Billsburg was at once adopted.

Believing that possibly the name was a hoodoo residents have changed the name of the town to Necanicum, after a river on which it is situated.

Asbestos is the name of a thriving Oregon settlement and one might suppose it to be the hottest town in the state. But it stands well up in the mountains of Josephine county and secured its name from the asbestos mine near by. Other Oregon towns which were named after nearby mines are Greenhorn, Greenback and Lucky Boy. There are also Mineral, Promise, Agate, Nugget, Oretown and Prospect.

There is no town at Mule, but the rancher wanted a postoffice. When Mahon, who headed the petition, was asked to select a name he suggested Anderson, as his ranch is in Anderson valley. But the department replied that there were too many Andersons in the country already and a shorter name would be advisable. So Mahon suggested Mule, and it was accepted.

Other animals or birds whose names decorate Oregon's post office are Cuyave, Crow, Grizzly, Grouse, Antelope, Fishhawk, Hare, Fox, Pelican and Salmon.

There are several names which, while they may seem strange for postoffices, are really natural selections. Such are Reuben and Rufus. Each was named for the man on whose land the town was established, the former for Reuben Foster and the latter for Rufus C. Wallis.

Shake is another postoffice of the same class. The name implies nothing as to cordiality or the lack of it as might be supposed, but it stands in a name which was named after a man when the office was named, and many shakes, a kind of shingle, were manufactured there.

Bridal Veil might hint of a romance. But there is no tradition to live up to the name. The postoffice stands near a beautiful waterfall in eastern Multnomah county resembling a spreading veil.

Steamboat is also a misnomer, for it stands on a creek not big enough to float a canoe. But in the early mining days the creek was named Steamboat Creek and the postoffice name came from that of the creek.

There was a name in Oregon named Push. It was a misnomer, too, for if any town ever lacked push it was this one. Appreciating that fact and be-

FINANCIERING OF YOUR FUTURE--Thrift and Economy the Only Road to Wealth

By John Anderson Jayne.
EVERY MAN who is a man manly among men looks forward to the time when he will get away from the drudgery of his desk, the brunt of his battles, the grind of his grist and the push of his pen.

In one corner of his mind he has built for himself a factory, has laid out a farm or has come to be a successful man of affairs.

He looks down the years and hails with joy the time when he shall be mastered by no man save himself and many will call him mister.

But when he comes to talk with the majority of men who are now occupying salaried positions, who are responsible for the welfare of others, they are very few of them, have given careful and painstaking thought to any method by which they shall be able to finance their splendid fortune to which they hope to come.

The majority of men think "sufficient unto the day" is the motto which they take no accounting of the years that are to come. They have no plans beyond those of the next pay day.

But here and there you will find a man, who, thinking resolutely relative to the future, resolutely determines to prepare for his coming independence by taking no accounting of the years that are to come. They have no plans beyond those of the next pay day.

But here and there you will find a man, who, thinking resolutely relative to the future, resolutely determines to prepare for his coming independence by taking no accounting of the years that are to come. They have no plans beyond those of the next pay day.
