WEATHER REPORT

The north Pacific high pressure area in its advance from the southwestward and its crest now overlies Nevada. The New Mexico disturbance has moved east and low pressure area made its appearance north of Montana and the Lake disturbance has disappeared as also has the Atlantic high pressure area. Heavy rains have fallen in the middle and lower Mississippi valley, and light rains are reported in western and northern Washington. Unusually low temperatures occurred in California and sharp frosts occurred in the interior of that state this morning as far south as the Mexican line. It is warmer than usual in the north Pacific states and chinook conditions prevail in western Montana and Alberta, where the temperature is about 20 degrees above normal. The indications are for occasional rain Saturday in western Oregon and in western Washington and northern Idaho. It will be colder tonight nearly everywhere east of the Cascade mountains.
