(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Pendleton, Or., Feb. 29.—Stella, the 9-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Forrest, living near Athena, died here last evening at St. Anthony's hospital as the result of eating candy a few days ago. The child had been a student at St. Joseph's academy. When her sisters returned from a wedding at Walla Walla they brought her 50 cents' worth of mixed candy and she was taken violently ill soon after eating a portion of it. Two of her little friends were also ill from it.
Physicians say that as the child had not been well before eating the candy, her system was poisoned from the coloring matter.
An investigation will be held.

MORSE HOPES TO SETTLE UP

Has Worked Out Plan by Which He Aims to Pay Off Debts.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
New York, Feb. 29.—Charles W. Morse got to work in dead earnest today to put new life in his shattered fortunes and save his millions of dollars in securities from being slaughtered by forced sales. He has worked out a plan by which he hopes to pay off all the depositors of the National Bank of North America with a minimum of delay, then take that institution out of the hands of Receiver Hanna, so that its assets can be liquidated in a way that will bring the stockholders a substantial return.
The essence of it provides that the stockholders shall raise $1,500,000 between themselves, which is the amount necessary to pay off all the depositors. If these creditors help him, Morse claims they will be assured of getting 100 cents on the dollar, whereas, if his securities are dumped upon the market the amount each creditor will realize will be problematical.

ANTI-MACHINE FORCES

three-lined circus and more exciting than the chariot race by E. Hur.
Statement No. 1 the Issue.
The one topic of interest and argument was Statement No. 1. The Hodson machine in private argument and public declamation waxed warm in denouncing the platform of the party in ordination of the statement and the direct primary law. Others more conservative argued for a plank in the platform advising a Republican choice while the friends of Statement No. 1 stood ready on guard, not ready to fight the convention but ready to battle for the principle.
C. M. Idleman, chairman of the central committee, called the consensus to order. He stated in doing so that this was the first time a convention had been called by the Republican party in Oregon since the adoption of the primary law by the legislature and the people. He said that the central committee believed it had the power to call a convention for the purpose of formulating a platform of principles, but at the same time believed that the supreme power of the state rested in the people themselves.
The convention was called therefore to express as far as in its power the principles of the party, and no more. James F. Kercheval, who was the Republican in the days of Grant, of Lincoln, of McKinley, and now of Roosevelt. He nominated M. G. Griffin.
James F. Kercheval was first on his feet, getting ahead of S. C. Beach by a fraction of a second. He made one of the old-time political nominating speeches, his main theme being the Republican in the days of Grant, of Lincoln, of McKinley, and now of Roosevelt. He nominated M. G. Griffin.
Beach swung into line with the nomination of F. F. Freeman. He eulogized his candidate in the old-time way, saying he was an old man, but was a Republican who had passed through the crucible of populism in 1896 and had come out 18 carats fine. He was a Republican, not on Sundays alone, but on week days as well. He had no tinge of Populism.
Then the nominations were closed and the wrangling began in earnest. Beach insisted on a vote by ballot. Ben Selling contended for a ballot, saying he had considered that he was coming to a convention, and he as a Republican wanted to do things that a Republican would do. He did not know what plans had been formulated to control the convention, but he as a Republican wanted to do things that a Republican would do.
Hodson wanted a rising vote. It was finally determined however to call the roll but to allow the delegates to vote by ballot as their preference was called. To expedite this plan Tom Hislop, A. W. Orton, S. C. Beach, L. E. Hodson and J. J. Sherman, all of whom were appointed as tellers to collect and count the ballots.
Cheer for Hughes.
At the first Freeman ran far in the lead but in the middle of the counting Griffin began to crawl up until the votes ran even or one and two in the lead until near the close, when Griffin forged ahead, winning by 21 votes.
Chairman Griffin threw a bomb into the speaking when he made his speech of acceptance. He began by saying that he did not know whether to thank the assembly for his election or not. He believed that his election was the result of a convention called by the party and he believed that the law gave the party the right to call conventions and formulate platforms. He believed in parties and in party government. President Roosevelt believed in party government as did Governor Hughes of New York, who would be the next president of the United States. He was drowned out by vociferous applause.
Continuing Mr. Griffin sprang his surprise. He turned his words to the primary law and flayed it alive. He said law because it was on the books but he hoped that a set of men would be sent to the legislature who would repeal it. It was law for the minority. "I believe in a machine if it is honest and an intelligent machine," he spoke continued. "I want to see harmony in the party and in the government here will do what I can in reason to preserve harmony."
Second Jangle Begins.
Another wrangle took place over the selection of a temporary secretary. W. M. Davis wanted to appoint, while S. C. Beach wanted the officer elected. Davis was elected before the meeting and Chairman Griffin appointed J. A. Sherwood. When the announcement was made Councilman F. A. Bennett, a delegate from the party, called out the "hat's right, carry out the slate." Which statement was greeted with laughter and signals of disapproval commingled.
A committee of seven was then appointed on credentials, consisting of E. B. Colwell, A. W. Orton, Ploudon Stott, A. J. Embury, W. H. Gall, and P. E. Sullivan.
S. C. Beach came into the limelight once more at this point by asking the clerk what resolutions there were to be presented on platform and resolutions since the documents had already been prepared and brought to the hall.
"Pull them out of your pocket then and let us get a look at the slate," some one called out of the audience and Beach sat down amid a demonstration.
"These remarks do not tend to harmony in this convention," admonished the chair, who was greeted with another outburst of mingled cries of "that's right," and "bring on the slate."
Chairman Griffin then proclaimed a recess of five minutes while he made his selections for the committee on resolutions, on platform and on permanent organization. The committees were then filled as follows:
Resolutions—J. F. Kercheval, G. A. Brown, Max G. Cohen, A. B. Manley and R. Deich.
Platform—Ward One, O. Johnson; Two, W. M. Davis; Three, J. J. Dunning; Four, Ben Selling; Five, C. M. Idleman; Six, H. Blyden; Seven, E. A. Austin; Eight, G. W. Orton; Nine, J. F. Sinnott; Ten, A. A. Courtney; at large, east side, C. Cleveland, O. J. Brown; west side, C. J. Schaefer; St. Johns, H. E. Collier.
Permanent organization—T. J. Gelsler, L. S. Dauge, J. F. Sinnott.

RUSSIAN Brides Are Picked at Annual Affair and Then Parents Are Bargained With.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
St. Petersburg, Feb. 29.—The annual marriage marts in the towns of Gschatch and Lystchiffka were held a few days ago; brisk business is reported all around.
In the first named town nearly 300 early maidens were disposed of. They arrived in the morning on sledges, attended by parents and relatives. After the horses had been put up the folk left their promising offspring to themselves, the women going to church, the men to seek the diversions of the town.
At 9 o'clock sharp, as is customary, the "sides line" was formed at the cathedral, the row of pretty maidens standing side by side, reached to the town house. The boys passed up and down the street examining every petitioner in slight for a possible "maternity." Needless to say, the girls were their best. As an indication that they were in the marriage mart for better or for worse, each held in her hand a white handkerchief adorned with flowers.
Up to 10 o'clock very little was doing, but at the stroke of the clock a well-to-do young fellow in a black and white coat what her name was, thus indicating that negotiations were to be opened. This first couple they started for the church to get out "mother." When they returned to obtain the father's blessing, they were considered already "matrimony." In this case the girl was only too willing to part with Olga, and soon the whole family celebrated the betrothal at the inn. Her name was Olga. The remarkable part is that not a single young woman went home unengaged.
In the town of Lystchiffka the marriage mart differs in one respect, for the girls do not place themselves on exhibition in rows, but march up and down the main street, six abreast, holding each other by the hand and looking as unconcerned as they can manage, while the male candidates for marriage line the sidewalks.
When a man sees a girl he wants, he must follow her to the end of the street and begin his courting when she turns around for another promenade. In this town girls do not carry a handkerchief in their hands, but attach it to their head dress, allowing it to flutter in the wind. Russian marriage marts is so popular an institution that a certain factory in Moscow devotes all of its energies to the making of handkerchiefs needed in the ceremony.
