SPRING IS HERE

Git yer onions ready an' yer taters in the ground,
Fer the robin is a-singin' an' the chip-
munk is around,
And yer carrots should be bloomin'
'fore the butterfly appears,
An' it's time that you were thinkin' of the early roastin' ears.

The festive rutabaga ought to be a-mov-
in' up,
While the mewin' early kitten is ca-
vortin' with the pup,
An' the cunnin' summer radish must be puttin' on its clothes,
An' be bowin' most politely to the blushin' climbin' rose.

The daisies are a-wipin' of the rain
drops from their eyes,
An' the charmin' clover blossom is alookin' to the skies, Fer these be days of springtime an' the buzzin' honey bee—
Oh, the happy days of blossoms are the joyous days for me.

THE PLAY

By J. F. S.

Let nobody come around prating of the good old days of comedy and wishing that we might have a revival of them. We had a revival last night and, excepting for the few to whom the Dion Boucicault recalled the many pleasures of a distant youth, it was a rather dreary affair. Perhaps the decadent drama has poisoned our systems. If that's the explanation, then we are too far gone to hope for redemption. Let's be glad that we are living in 1908, and that "The Spring Chicken" is one of the things that is due in Portland in a year or two.

"Never seen 'London Assurance?'" said a man wonderingly. "Why, it's the funniest comedy I ever, ever witnessed. So far ahead of the piffle of these days. It isn't quite up to the level of Marlowe and Fletcher's best, but it is the nearest thing to them that I know of. Never seen 'London Assurance'! Why, what a treat you have in store for you!"

It was a very disappointing treat. It opened with a chill when yellow-haired Bessie Davis came out in the most cheese-clothy dress imaginable and let her yellow corkscrew curls fly hither and thither at the sweet will of the draughts from the wings. Bessie looked cold and acted as though the frost had penetrated to the joints, where it ceased to hurt and only super-induced numbness.

It grew worse when Mark Meddle, who, it can be imagined, might be extremely funny in the hands of some men, but who was merely irritating as played by Heolyn Bruson, bustled out and recited his foolishness. And it certainly wasn't helped to any great extent by the work of Mr. Clement.

He was mildly mellow in the part, to be sure. He went at it with that old-time assurance of his that it was funny, and he succeeded in convincing a good many that it really was. But his egotism got the better of him and, instead of allowing Sir Harcourt to be a very funny old man, he merely made him a mildly amusing middle-aged one. It was a genteel performance on the part of Mr. Clement, but not an excessively inspiring one. It simply created a warmly humid atmosphere in which Miss Davis could blow her white and frosty breath.

But that there were a few old-timers in the audience who were immensely entertained by the performance there can be no doubt. For them Sir Harcourt was very funny indeed. Upon them Charles Courtley's sallies were not wasted, and the old-fashioned graces of expression were followed intelligently.

Miss Kerrigan played Lady Gay Spanker with all her dash and enthusiasm. But in her recital of the hunting scene one's heart went out in pity for the horse that had made such a noble leap carrying every pound of her 14 stone. The horse wasn't on the stage, however, and Miss Kerrigan is very overwhelming in a riding skirt and pink hunting coat, so why worry about the dumb brute. "London Assurance" will be given this afternoon and tonight.

SKETCHES OF PORTLAND PASTORS

Rev. Harry H. Pratt.

Rev. Harry H. Pratt, pastor of Forbes Presbyterian church, is a native of Illinois. He was born down in "Egypt" and staid there for a few short years. As a small boy he moved to central Kansas where he spent his boyhood in the free and happy environment of ranch life on the prairies. As a youth from 17 to 20 he lived in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, California. Shortly after this period he returned to Kansas, taught school one year and then went to college, graduating in 1896 from the College of Emporia. The first year of his seminary course he took at Princeton. The second and third years at the San Francisco Theological seminary. Mr. Pratt was married immediately after graduation from the seminary to Miss Maude Romaine Frick of Salina, Kansas, the daughter of a Presbyterian minister. The young people moved shortly to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where they lived until they came to Portland. Mr. Pratt was pastor elect of the churches at Atglen and Christiana in Pennsylvania at the time he accepted the call to come to Oregon. He has been in his present pastorate nearly six years. The Forbes church, which Mr. Pratt serves, was last December destroyed by fire. Immediately plans were made for rebuilding and the contract has now been let for the new structure, which will cost about $10,000 and will probably be completed before the first of July. The main audience room and the Sunday school room will be so arranged that they can be thrown together. In the basement a kitchen and dining room will be installed and also a gymnasium. The church building will house a strong and united congregation.
