WEATHER REPORT

The western disturbance has increased in magnitude, but its center has remained nearly stationary over southern Utah. It has caused general rains in California and heavy snow in Utah and northern Arizona. Light snow has fallen in connection with this storm in Nevada and southern Idaho, and local snows are reported in Montana, the Dakotas and Minnesota. Moderately heavy rain has fallen in Missouri and lighter amounts are reported in the adjoining states. It is colder in California and the rains in that state have been followed by clear weather with frosts this morning as far south as Los Angeles. The temperatures in the north Pacific states have risen slightly, and it is also warmer in the Canadian northwest, the Mississippi valley, and the lake region.

The indications are for rain or snow tonight or Friday in eastern Oregon, eastern Washington, and Idaho, with generally fair weather in western Oregon and western Washington. It will be colder tonight in southern Idaho.
