MAUD, OH MAUD, SHE HAS A STOMACH LIKE A GOAT

Down near the mouth of the historic Columbia river on an eminence away from the roar of the undulating waves beating against rocks ages old, and within the shadow of the North Head lighthouse, the season of light of all ships coming to Portland, is a horse and ordinary animal in some ways—waiting and longing and anticipating the coming of summer.

The horse's name is Maud. That is, she is called Maud by her owners who live near the lighthouse, but by the many other visitors to North Head lighthouse, the season of light of all ships coming to Portland, is a horse and ordinary animal in some ways—waiting and longing and anticipating the coming of summer.

Maud is Sighing, Poor Thing. There are deviled eggs in the lunch baskets, lettuce sandwiches, fruits of various kinds, pies and cakes, and everything else or more in the baskets and the edibles the picnicers are fond of. But they do not like them any better than Maud does.

So that's why Maud, the North Head horse, is waiting and looking forward to the arrival of summer and the picnic parties which always will come with the balmy days of warm weather. Maud has the run of the yards surrounding the lighthouse. For years it has been her privilege to go and come as she pleases. Consequently when she spies a picnic party she waits from a safe distance until the people have taken themselves off to the picnic. Then it is that Maud gets busy. She has been patiently awaiting the opportunity. The deviled eggs, the nice dainty lettuce sandwiches, bananas, skins and all, and everything else disappear. If it happens that the picnicers take milk or cream for their coffee, Maud swallows that, too.

Having had the fun of eating what the picnicers had intended for themselves, Maud retires to a safe distance and watches for the consternation which is sure to ensue as soon as the happy ones return to the lunch baskets and find their picnic supplies missing.

Mr. Lafferty watched the proceedings in the house of representatives concerning the bill granting the land from the Oregon & California Railroad company's land grant to the government.

Mr. Lafferty's impression while in Washington was that the bill would pass the lower house of congress as it did the senate, although he said

FINISH SURVEY FOR PACIFIC & EASTERN

Fourteen surveyors have recently completed surveys of an additional 10 miles of trackage which is to be built by the owners of the Pacific & Eastern railroad in southern Oregon during the present year. The road is owned by Edgar Hafer of Medford, who is now in the city, and C. H. Lewis of Portland.

The Crater Lake company, successors to the Iowa Lumber & Box company, of which Mr. Hafer is manager, is erecting two new sawmills on the line of the Pacific & Eastern. These mills will have a capacity of 75,000 feet of lumber a day.

The Pacific & Eastern, which was only recently purchased by Mr. Hafer and Mr. Lewis, taps a belt of 6,000,000 feet of the finest timber in the state.

Blemishes, pimples, eruptions, rashes, medicated by Satin skin cream soon disappear.

The discovery is made, great excitement follows, complaint is made to the keeper of the light and there is great confusion generally. Not a thing in the setting line has been left in the baskets. Maud, fat, sleek, contented, satisfied, stands serenely by and looks on with an air of happiness. Nearly every day during the summer she gets her fill of the most delicious delicacies which the kind people bring her.

This summer a "look out for the hungry horse" sign is to be put up to warn the picnicers of Maud's appetite. So while the winter breezes are blowing in from the ocean, great waves are piling huge logs and sombre wreckage on the beach, and there are other mysterious of the deep, blue ocean every where to be seen, dear old Maud, the horse, is spending the winter at North Head. There is no man, woman or child in Portland longing for summer and the pleasures of the seashore as fondly as is fat, sassy Maud, the horse, the pet of North Head.

there was a strong fight being made against the measure by the railroad company and innocent purchasers of portions of the original grant.

'Tis Spring! I need a new Suit. I demand the best for the price.

Ergo! —Me, to the Columbia Tailors

My every wish is satisfied there. I may choose from hundreds of patterns, weaves, a variety of new colorings and any style I want at any price I care to pay. I get the proper fit—the skill of the artist tailor—the courtesy and attention that tickles a man's vanity. In short, if I paid twice as much to any other tailor, I could get no better selection—no lower price—no more expert work.

—Which Way Shall I Take

The Ready-Made Route Where experienced salesmanship tempts me to take that in which there is the greatest profit to the merchant, regardless of what I hoped to be able to buy. Where it counts for less and profit for all.

The Tailor-Made Route Where I make my own selection, dictate my own style, feel assured that I will get a perfect fit and know that I will look more a man in a longer-lasting suit.

THAT FOR ME
