WEATHER REPORT

A trough of low pressure extends from British Columbia southeastward to Oklahoma, and thence east and north to the lake region. A new high pressure area is approaching the Oregon coast, and another new high pressure area overlies the upper Mississippi valley. The barometer is relatively high over the Atlantic states. During the last 24 hours light rain or snow has fallen at scattered places along the northern boundary of the United States from the Pacific ocean east to New England. It is cooler in the north Pacific states and much colder in the Dakotas, Saskatchewan, New England and the middle Atlantic states.

The indications are for clearing weather in this district, with light frost tonight in western Oregon and western Washington. It will be cooler tonight east of the Cascade mountains.

The tributaries to the Willamette river are now all falling, and the main stream is falling at Harrisburg and Salem, but a slight rise has occurred at Eugene and Albany. The Columbia river is rising rapidly at all stations, but nowhere does the water approach the flood stage. The Willamette river at Portland will remain nearly on a stand today and fall slowly Wednesday and Thursday.
