Maintains Work at State Legislature Was Open and Above Board.

Clyde B. Altehison, present railroad commissioner of the state and former attorney for the trust department of the Title Guarantee & Trust company, demas that he was a member of any secret lobby maintained by the trust company at Salem during the last session of the legislature for the purpose of influencing pending legislation. He admits that he was there and that he did take part in shaping bills which came before the legislative assembly, but he contends that what he did was open and above board and that he has no apologies to make.

"I was employed as an attorney for the Title Guarantee & Trust company in the trust department," said Mr. Aitchison this morning. "I was also clerk of the state tax commission for 13 months and assisted in shaping up the tax code presented to the legislature at the last session. When the legislature at the last session, When the legislature convened Mr. Mulkey, the chairman of the commission, was in Washington, and other members could not attend the session, so I went to Salem upon the invitation of Senator Bingham, chairman of the joint committee on assessment and taxation, to explain the tax bills which had been prepared by the commission.

which had been prepared by the commission.

"At that time I discovered the vicious tendency of house bill 267, introduced by Jackson, and providing that bills of review could be filed at any time within 10 years after the date of final judgment. I recognized that this bill was aimed at the Marquam property suit, which had been determined adversely to Judge Marquam by the supreme court. "Enowing that the Title Guarantee company was interested in the matter I wired to President Ross, as an employe of the institution, telling him of the hostile legislation and advising that some one be sent to investigate it. The bill passed the house but was tabled in the senate, and I am giad to have had a hand in killing such a vicious measure, for it would have unsettled the entire legal machinery of the state. Under it no action brought in the courts would have been settled until 10 years had elapsed after the date of final judgment.

"In regard to the banking bill, I appeared openly before the joint committee on banking. It was no secret and I at that time urged strongly both in committee and to individual members of the committee that in the case of trust companies provisions should be made that properties held in trust should be kept separate from the general deposits of the bank. This provision was made. "I do not know anything about the terms of the depository law. I was not familiar with the terms of the law and only knew that a number of prominent attorneys and bankers throughout the state had been asked to make suggestions on the bill." Appeared in Open.

John Bain, secretary of the Municipal association, denies the rumor that the association has not indorsed James of Cole for the office of district attorney in a perfectly parliamentary and legal manner. Mr. Bain in discussing the matter this morning said:

"There is no truth in the rumor that the association has not indorsed Mr. Cole in a perfectly regular manner, or in the story that there is dissension because of the indorsement. The meeting of Tuesday following which the announcement was made of the association's indorsement, was not called for the purpose of considering the indorsement but of making it public at that time. The indorsement had been given by the executive board at a previous meeting and was unanimous."

Fifty festive monkeys on the long voyage had watched the Chinese, Japanese, American and English sallors shooting the clusive dice, and, after their habit, decided to imitate. First Officer Euman and Third Officer Mabor, who own the monks, decided to initiate them into the mysteries of the ivory cubes. Dice were doled out to the monkeys, and many of them, tame and young, were permitted on deck. They rolled the "bones" about, jabbered over them—and incidentally threw them so furiously that the visible supply of dice was exhausted.

The "cop" on the pier heard the rolling of the "bones" and drew his club heroically. The captain of the vessel, however, gointed to the Union Jack and declared the ship was under the protection of Great Britain, and therefore the deck of the ship was really British soil.

The bluecoat jammed his fingers in his eyes a few minutes, and after—a good rub and a long think, said he thought the captain was right. San Francisco, March 19.—Further plans regarding the reception of the Atlantic fleet at San Franisco are outlined in a letter received today by Mayor Taylor from Captain R. R. Ingersoll of the Connecticut at Magdalena bay, in which the latter said Admiral Evans is desirious of meeting the wishes of the citizens of San Francisco Concerning the plans, Captain Ingertoll

Concerning the plans, Captain Ingersoll writes:

"The fleet will enter the bay in single column and will take a course that will enable the people living in all the Bay cities to get a full view of it. When anchored the ships will occupy a space three-fourths of a sea mile square. The fleet will be illuminated on the night of its arrival from 8 to 10:30 o'clock. If a parade is contemplated a landing force of 81 companies, or 20 battalions, about 5,000 men, will parade. It is suggested that the parade will be held on the day following the arrival."

Police officers whose tour of duty lies in the neighborhood of the church have been instructed by Chief of Police Gritzmacher to make a special effort to catch and punish the offenders.
