WEATHER REPORT

A storm of decided character is developing over the north Pacific coast and southwest storm warnings were accordingly ordered hoisted at 7 a. m. this morning, at all display stations in the forecast district. High southerly winds along the coast during the night attended the development of this storm, a maximum of 68 miles from the southeast being reported from North Head and 40 miles from the south at Tatoosh island. Fresh to brisk southerly winds also prevailed at interior points. No rain occurred except along the Washington coast and in extreme northwestern Washington. Temperatures were decidedly above the normal, especially at Portland, Walla Walla and Spokane. A moderate high overlies California and fair weather prevails in consequence over the entire southwest this morning. The pressure is comparatively low over Kansas, and though no rain of consequence has fallen, the temperature over the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains has risen decidedly during the last 24 hours. The depression noted over the Mississippi valley yesterday morning has moved eastward, and is now passing off the New England coast. Heavy rains are reported over the Atlantic and gulf states this morning.

The indications point to rain over this entire district tonight and Wednesday.
