WEATHER REPORT

The storm noted over British Columbia last evening has taken a southeasterly course, and this morning appears in the shape of a trough of low pressure extending from Nevada northeastward to the Dakotas. The disturbance retains to a great extent its pronounced character, but the rainfall attending its southeastward course has nevertheless been very moderate, though it was quite general over the northern states from the Pacific eastward to North Dakota. Snow was falling at time of observation at Boise, Helena and Havre. Temperatures in the rear of this disturbance over Oregon, Washington, and western Montana were decidedly lower than yesterday morning, but in advance of the storm they were correspondingly higher. The pressure is comparatively high over the eastern portion of the country and clear skies generally prevail. Temperatures east of the Mississippi river have fallen decidedly during the last 24 hours and are now considerably below the normal, especially in the upper Lake region, where zero temperatures are reported.

Fair weather is indicated over this forecast district tonight and Thursday, with frost tonight. It will be warmer over western Oregon and western Washington Thursday, and colder tonight in eastern Idaho.
