Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the English actress who is to play two nights at the Heilig theatre a week from next Monday and Tuesday nights, will give "The Second Mrs. Tanquary" at the opening performance, and "The Notortous Mrs. Ebbsmith" on Tuesday. Mrs. Campbell will not give any of her new plays in Portignd. She was to have played the new version of the Greek tragedy "Electra," but the lady has positively declined to appear in matinee in this city, so Portland audiences will only see her as the somewhat malodorous lady of the Pinero drama.

PORTLAND SYMPHONY SCORES INITIAL SUCCESS

Portland has long needed a symphony rchestra of its own for several reasons. One is because every city of any size should be able to support an orchestra before it can lay claim to much culture. Another reason is that orchestral music is an education. And a third reason is that many people need to be educated in the ethics of hearing music. They need to be taught that the fortissimo passages of a symphony are not interpolated merely with the charitable thought that the audience may be tired of sibilant whispering and may want the relief of talking aloud. When some one in the parquet well down in want the relief of talking aloud. When some one in the parquet well down in front yesterday shricked out, presumably under cover of the blaring brass in the second movement of the symphony. "I think the other must have been the Ann-Danty!" many of her neighbors wished she would apply the same alow quiet movement to her same slow quiet movement to her

But the program itself was so well played and the concert so successful musically that one is loth to waste space on individuals of unfortunate ignorance.

musically that one is loth to waste space on individuals of unfortunate ignorance.

The crowning number of the afternoon was the Beethoven Fifth Symphony in C minor, the best known and perhaps the greatest of his symphonies. The first movement was not played and only the andante and allegro or scherzo movements were given. It was this symphony of Beethoven's that really opened the road for the most picturesque and poetical music of the romantic school and in which Beethoven is said to have reached the triumphant climax in the school of which he is called the prophet. Mr. Dierke, through his instruments, succeeded in putting all the beautiful color, the wealth of sentiment and the conflicting emotions that the composer felt when he wrote this symphony, a picture, it is thought from his own tragic love experience. The best use is made of the contrasting instruments and the effect of the symphony is altogether delightful.

The Lisst concerto played by Mrs. Beatrice Dierke on the plano was hardly less an orchestral venture though it is not dictinctly an orchestral number. The accompaniment to the brilliant less an orchestral venture though it is not dictinctly an orchestral number. The accompaniment to the brilliant tuneful concerto was excellent and the players did themselves proud in the in-terpolations of ornamental cadenzas which only careful practice and closest attention can bring to perfection. Mrs. Dierke's playing of this splendid number was full of brilliancy and verve and never has she been known to play better. Her confidence seemed to creep into the orchestra and the composition was played with a dash that deserved the overwhelming applause it commanded, was played with a dash that deserved the overwhelming applause it commanded.

The Lohengrin music announced under "Introduction to the Third Act," but really introduction to the Third Act," but really introduction to the Third Act," but really introduction most of the music within the act was probably the most popular because the most familiar. It was admirably played and the dainty love music preceding the bridal hymn was done with delightful shading. The Meyerbeer Coronation March which opened the program with a good deal of life and feeling of joy, and the rather piquant Slavenic Dance (Dvorak) completed the orehestral program. Too much cannot be said of their work and Mr. Dierke, the conductor, and the players deserve much commendation for the splendid form in which they have put their work in the very short time of practice and work.

Mrs. Dierke, the soloist, received an old-fashloned ovation. Her playing was never better and that is decided pasies for one who aiways plays as she does. Some of her best and most attractive work was chosen from her concert program of a few months ago. "Le Cygne" (Saint-Saens) is one of the best things she has ever played and it is done with beauty and grace of expression, a rich tone, and with the lovely gliding motion perfectly reproduced. The Rosenthal Papillons, for which she is already famous because of her closeness to the author in her rapid tempo, she did admirably and she deserves the greatest commendation for her presence of mind in the face of a disconcerting accident. The de Schloazer Etude with its double sixths showed her in one of her strongest points. Her encores were the Henselt, "If I Were a Bird," and the delighted Delivity Deliv her strongest points. Her encores were the Henselt, "If I Were a Bird," and the delightful Poldini Japanese etude so expressive of chop-sticks, another of her successes at her concert. She was showerd with flower her successes at her concert. She was showered with flowers.

The first concert of the local orchestra may well serve as a strong encouragement to the management and the players both. The other two of the series are locked forward to with eagerness now after this first signal success and demonstration of Portland musicians' ability.
