

HEAVY GUNS DEFEATS HIS ENEMY

Senator Declares That Henry Withheld Evidence in His Possession Which Gave Different Meaning to Letters Read—Army is Thronged.

Before an audience of 2,000 people who alternately cheered the names of Fulton, of Henry and of George E. Chamberlain, United States Senator Charles W. Fulton spoke last night at the Army in his own defense from the attacks made upon him by Francis J. Henry and to urge his claims for reelection to the United States senate. In his address the speaker contended that Henry had made his attacks upon him to satisfy the purposes of a secret political cabal, that he had been unfair and untruthful in his charges, had distorted the facts in order to besmirch the character and reputation of the senator, and that he had followed him for three years with that end in view.

The speaker questioned the motives of Mr. Henry, "said that they were not in any way connected with the cause of political and civic regeneration, and charged that the Californian had deliberately lied in many of his accusations, giving false impressions by documents when he had in his possession other and superior copies, and explaining away any intent or effort of wrongdoing. Throughout the address the speaker was frequently interrupted by applause, and when he defended himself against the charges that he had made by his friends, Mitchell, Herrmann, Williamson and others, he rose to the heights of eloquence and was cheered to the echo. In closing he briefly referred to his desire to return to the United States, and hoped that if there were those who considered him a fit and qualified man for the place they would cast their ballots for his nomination and election.

Relly Holds Olden Days.
It was the old time political rally crowd that greeted Senator Fulton when he entered the Army. All of the old-time veterans were on hand. Various candidates for the different offices sat on the platform, while Judge George H. Williams occupied the center of the stage and at the close of Senator Fulton's address spoke briefly in favor of Fulton's reelection. The senator was preceded by Dr. Caprio, and accompanied by William D. Wheelwright, the chairman of the evening, who introduced Senator Fulton.

As Senator Fulton took his place on the platform some admirer in the audience called for three cheers for Fulton, which were given. Immediately thereafter some one in another part of the hall called for three cheers for Francis J. Henry, and the cheering of the crowd, seemingly the same voices which a moment before had cheered the senator broke forth once more in applause of the man who had been called "put him out" and "silence him."

In his speech of introduction Mr. Wheelwright reviewed the senator's career in congress, telling of what he had accomplished. He said that Fulton was only one member of the Oregon delegation on duty in Washington. He spoke of the great number of senators who had preceded him, and of the high standing of Fulton with that of any new man. It was also stated that the senator's record was moment stamped by the admirers of Governor Chamberlain. Mr. Wheelwright had spoken of the high standing of Senator Fulton on the committee list.

Cheers for Chamberlain.
"And thus brings us to the Democratic question," he began. "Governor Chamberlain—instantly from all over the state comes a chorus of approval and support to the voice of Mr. Wheelwright, who sought vainly to proceed.

"I am glad to hear that round of applause," he said in beginning. "It is indeed a high tribute that under the circumstances you should come in with such numbers to give me an opportunity to give my side of the case."

Why Fulton Left Capital.
Senator Fulton said it was with great reluctance that he had left his post at Washington at this time. Matters of great importance were pending there which he would have liked to have attended to. He went to the record briefly, saying he was proud to be able to say that he had secured the largest appropriation for the Columbia river in the history of its improvement. But he contended, yet he had been unable to secure what was Oregon's due or right. He hoped to live to the time when the war was would line the river along the entire peninsula and Portland was the greatest shipping center of the Willamette valley, and for these reasons and others of pressing importance every minute that he spent away from Washington was a minute lost in his endeavor for the good of the state.

He then turned directly to the reason of his being in Oregon at this time. "There is but one consideration that brought me back to Oregon," he said. "I should not have come simply to urge my candidacy for reelection. A year ago I announced that I would not be here during the campaign. I felt that having served the people for six years they could know from my record whether I should be sent back to Washington. I expected opposition, but I expected that it would be conducted along the line of decency and propriety. I never expected that my character would be assailed in order to satisfy a political cabal, having as its object my political annihilation. I knew nothing of this until I saw an interview from Mr. Henry, attacking my character. I addressed a letter to him stating that his charges were false, that he had no evidence upon which to base his charges, and that I would strike him down if he would strike them down. And so when Henry said he had proof that I was corrupt I called upon his to produce it. He refused to do so, and I addressed his address here, the question was up to me whether I would allow myself and the people of the state to rest in the belief that his accusations were true, or whether I would stand by them. While I esteem it a great honor to represent Oregon in congress, yet there is one thing I esteem higher and that is the good opinion of the people of the state."

Malice and Spleen.
"For three years there has been a secret cabal carried on against me of which Mr. Henry has been the leading and active head. When I went to Washington in 1905, I was charged with a crime, not charging a crime but containing stuff which they had gone down into the records and which I was required to report by law. It was not a report in the discharge of any duty, but one actuated by malice and spleen. Senator Fulton then charged the Mr. Henry did not come to Oregon in the interest of good citizenship, and read an article he had written charging Mr. Francisco attacking Henry and his methods, in which it was charged that Henry allowed Ruff to testify that he had no evidence against him, and that when he at the time had one in his pocket drawn by Henry.

The senator then read from the report filed against him in Washington in which it was charged that Brownell had voted for Fulton at the last hour of the senatorial contest, and upon the promise of appointment to the office of district attorney.

"Henry knew when he signed that paper," said the senator, "that Brownell had voted for me from the first to the last. He knew when he made the statement that he was signing a deliberate and malicious lie."

Senator Fulton also branded as untrue the story of Henry that Herrmann had testified before the grand jury that the Oregon delegation had decided to vote for Fulton for attorney. He read a telegram from Herrmann in which Herrmann denied giving such testimony. "Henry knew that this statement was untrue. If Herrmann gave such testimony before the grand jury Henry has a record of it and it is up to him to produce the record," said the senator.

The Mays vote incident was also called to question. Henry had charged that E. P. Mays had cast his vote for Fulton at the last, under promise of personal gain.

No Vote From Mays.
"Henry knew, for the records of the legislature show," he said, "that Mays did not cast his vote for me at any time. He knew that Mays sat stolid when I was changing to the other side and did cast his vote for me. He knew when he made that statement that it was a lie made for the purpose of injuring me."

The speaker then took up the Brownell letters, which Mr. Henry had used against him, particularly the one in which Brownell had written that he was saying he would intercede with W. W. Cotton, then just appointed federal judge, in Brownell's behalf, and which Henry contended had to do with Brownell's indictment.

"Henry had two letters," said Senator Fulton, "and he used one of the one which would serve his purpose. It is easy to interpret letters to discredit a man. He used this letter which I wrote to Brownell promising to intercede in his behalf, but he did not use Brownell's letter in which mine was an answer."

The speaker then took up the Brownell letter, in which Brownell had asked Fulton to use his influence with Cotton to secure an appointment for Brownell as attorney for the Southern Railway, and argued that Henry was unjust and unfair in using his name alone, twisting it to make it appear that the promise of intercession had to do with the Brownell indictment.

Regarding Smith Affidavit.
The speaker then took up the J. S. Smith affidavit, which Henry had used against him. He charged that Henry was unfair in not stating that Powell would make the denial. He also charged that Henry had used the name of Powell's loyalty to his friends under indictment, and grew eloquent in his defense, holding that no matter what might be charged against him he would never have to make the charge that he had deserted a friend in need. The affidavit was discussed briefly.

In speaking of this, Senator Fulton said:

"Well, I don't care to go into this very much. Mr. Webster did vote for me and I was very grateful for it. One day he came to me and said he thought he might as well make hay while the sun was shining. He said he could get the money for me. He finally asked me what he wanted. He said it was not necessary for him to say what he wanted. He finally asked me to promise to see that a vacancy existed in the office of state fish warden and have him appointed. He said it was not in my power to do this. He said he would do it for me."

AMENDMENT
The bill, known as senate bill 422, has been in the hands of the senate committee on interstate commerce since December 4, 1907. The chairman of this committee is Senator E. H. Clegg of Iowa. His other members are Senator Cullom of Illinois, Aldrich of Rhode Island, Keen of New Jersey, Doolittle of Iowa, Foraker of Ohio, Clapp of Minnesota, Crane of Massachusetts, Tillman of South Carolina, McLaughlin of Mississippi, Foster of Louisiana, Newlands of Nevada and Taylor of Tennessee.

"There seems to have been desultory consideration of this bill, and it is understood that some slight change not objectionable to its original framers have been made, but still it is not reported out for action by the senate. The duty of lumbermen and shippers of all classes is clear.

"Let the senators and representatives know by letter and wire and through the daily press what the people think about this matter."

SET TIME TO HEAR STANDARD'S APPEAL

Cudahy & Co. Said to Have Procured Options on Land—Official Recently Visited City to Look for a Trade.

Within a month the actual work of constructing the building for the L. Swift Packing company will be started on the Peninsula. This much is stated by those close to the affairs of the big corporation.

The new side track which the Harriman company is constructing to Packinghouse town is completed half way across the slough and the work of pushing the remainder of the trestle will be hurried as much as possible. According to livestock officials the sidetrack will be completed before the month is ended and then the actual work of construction on the new packing house will be started.

Work will likewise be started on the Union stockyards at the same time as on the Swift plant, but the former will be completed first.

An official of the Cudahy Packing company has been in the city for several days, and has been looking over several pieces of property the eastern packing company is said to have taken options on. While nothing of a definite nature regarding the Cudahy Packing company will be given out by officials, there is no denial of the report that the company intends to secure a slice of the trade of the Pacific northwest, Alaska and the orient by building a plant here.

Terrific Case of Indigestion.
Mr. Donald Robb Jr., 16 Wrights Ave., Nova Scotia, Canada, Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger, Independent Order of Foresters, writes:

"While on a visit to Boston I must have eaten something that did not agree with my stomach, as a terrible case of indigestion followed. Peruna was recommended to me, and after using three bottles I was entirely cured. I therefore recommend Peruna to any one suffering with stomach trouble."

Every Trace of Catarrh Gone.
Mr. James P. Bracken, 610 Tenth Ave., New York City, N. Y., has occupied the office of Water Inspector of New York City for the past fifteen years. He carries on an extensive plumbing business at 610 Tenth Ave. He is Post Deputy of Grand Knights of Regina Cella Council Knights of Columbus, N. Y. He writes as follows:

"For nearly a dozen years catarrh has bothered me in one form or another. I was troubled with nasal catarrh, this had affected my stomach, which troubled me most in the morning. My appetite was poor, and I did not seem to relish my food. Indigestion bothered me at times also.

"I was advised to take Peruna, and I took it as prescribed for a month when my cure was almost complete. Today there is not a trace of catarrh in my system, and I can say without hesitation that Peruna cured me."

Relieves Mind and Body.
Mr. G. W. Woodbury, Rogers, Ohio, formerly Captain and Center of the Hiram College Basketball Team, writes:

"When body and mind alike were weary and refused to work a few doses of Peruna restored lost strength and vigor. I was quick and more pleasantly than anything I know."

Unhesitatingly Recommends Peruna.
J. Edwin Brown, National Commander Army and Navy Union of U. S., 216 13th St., N. E. Washington, D. C., writes:

"Peruna was recommended to me by many of my associates, and I have given it a fair trial. Have found it a most agreeable and effective tonic, pleasant, soothing, and leaves one free from the deleterious effects produced by the many nostrums now on the market. I have suffered from catarrhal affections the past winter, and have found Peruna most beneficial and commend it for what it has done for me."

People who object to liquid medicines can now secure Peruna tablets. These tablets represent the medicinal ingredients of Peruna, and each tablet is equivalent to one average dose.

The Family Relies on Pe-ru-na.
A. Howitt Nickerson, Captain U. S. Army, Adjutant General on General McCook's staff, writes from the Census Building, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"It affords me great pleasure to commend Peruna as a most excellent tonic with many qualities that assist nature in overcoming the various ailments with which the human family is often afflicted, and is always in danger. As a general thing, I have been opposed to what are known as patent medicines, but Peruna has long since overcome this feeling. It is now as it has been for a long time, a well established family medicine with us, upon which we rely to give tired nature substantial restoration."
