WEATHER REPORT

Since yesterday morning there has been a general fall of the barometer along the Pacific coast and the weather has again become unsettled and showery in the north Pacific states. A small high pressure area overlies the lake region and there is evidence of the approach of a high pressure area from the region north of Alberta. The storm yesterday over the lower lakes has moved east to the New England coast. Light rain has fallen at scattered places in Colorado, Oklahoma, Kansas, the gulf states and New England. It is much colder in British Columbia, eastern Washington, the lake region, and the upper Ohio valley, and correspondingly warmer in southeastern Montana and North Dakota.

The indications are for showers in this district during the next 36 hours. It will be colder tonight in southern Idaho.
