COMMERCIAL CLUB IN NEW HOME NEXT WEEK

Building at Fifth and Oak Streets Now Complete, and the Club's Four Stories Have Been Furnished.

Arrangements for moving the Portland Commercial club into its new home at the corner of Oak and Fifth streets are being made. The kitchen will be ready for business Saturday of this week, the dining-room is already furnished, the big lounging room and billiard rooms are rapidly receiving their furniture, and the move will take place next week. The club's home when complete and furnished will have cost $432,000. Moving arrangements were discussed yesterday at the weekly meeting of the board of governors, and it was decided that the club could be completely settled in its new home by May 15. The actual removal of the offices of the club will occur at any time after next Saturday, and the cuisine will be opened at the new club early next week. It is thought dining-room service can begin in the new quarters at the same time.

Furnishing Nearly Complete.

All carpets are in and curtains are hung. The billiard tables are in place. The dining tables and chairs are in the dining-room. The quarters for lodgers are furnished, all bedroom suites are in, and the baths are complete and furnished. The large order for furniture for the big lounging room and smaller parlors is not yet all delivered, but is coming rapidly. Today the Home Telephone company and the Pacific company are putting in private exchanges in the club office, and connecting them with every room in the club's four stories, with the extension phones to serve all tables in the dining-room and different parts of the main lounging room.

The board of governors adopted the following resolutions, and copies were sent to the proper authorities at Washington:

"That general treaties of arbitration should be negotiated by the United States with all nations, granting jurisdiction to the international court at The Hague over as many classes of controversies as the other contracting power in each case can be induced to transfer from the field of battle to the precincts of courts of justice.

"That the United States should declare in favor of a permanent international congress containing representatives from every nation, to assemble periodically and automatically for the purpose of suggesting such changes in the law of nations and in the method of its administration as the current of events may make desirable and practicable.

"That present conditions call for the immediate adoption of a progressive naval program that will give the United States a navy capable of performing its duty—i. e., of protecting our vast coast, our great and ever-increasing volume of ocean-going commerce, our growing interests in foreign markets, our distant possessions, and of executing effectively the just foreign policies of the nation.

JACK TARS

parade, Brigadier-General J. A. Koster, of the California National guard, followed by his honorably retired staff and mounted orderlies.

Funston in Line.

The head of the first division was General Frederick Funston and the regulars of the army swung into line. General Funston was followed by his staff of 10 with Colonel W. J. Duncan as chief. The enlisted men came next, the noise of their steady tramp rising above the hoof beats of the army horses ridden by the commander and staff and even audible above the cheers of the spectators.

The army division was made up as follows: Battalion United States engineers, signal corps company, entire Twenty-second regiment of infantry, Colonel A. Reynolds, commanding; provisional regiment of 12 companies of coast artillery, Colonel A. J. Lundeen, commanding; provisional regiment of six companies of coast artillery, Lieutenant-General Adam Sinker, commanding; Second battalion, First United States artillery; Second squadron Fourth United States cavalry.

The cavalrymen, picturesque in parade uniform, the color bearer carrying the company pennant at the head of each column, were liberally applauded for their splendid appearance.

Evans' Carriage and Escort.

The "color" momentarily dropped out of the parade at this point, but by no means the enthusiasm provoker, for next in line came the carriages and the one great feature of the magnificent pageant. In the first carriage were seated Governor Gillett and Secretary of the Navy Metcalf. The nine following contained Governor Gillett's staff and officers from the fleet. In the eleventh were Governor Sheldons of Nebraska and members of the fleet committee. Members of Governor Sheldon's staff rode in the six following.

The carriage No. 18, drawn by four spanking horses, sat Rear Admiral Evans and Mayor Taylor, surrounded by the Salt Lake States Guard. In full dress uniform, the "old fellow" as he was affectionately referred to by the crowd, looking feeble in body, but with the old fire in his eye, sat as erect as his weakened condition would permit chapeau in hand, and looking immensely pleased.

The carriages making up this part of the parade contained the foreign consuls and commanding officers of the fleet.

The next in line and forming the second division came the men from the fleet. Their appearance was the signal for an outburst that equaled the appearance of Rear Admiral Evans. Led by Captain Seaton Schroeder of the Connecticut, 5,500 marines and sailors marched to the music of their bands. The marines, in their smart uniforms and visored caps, led the van, followed by the sailors from the Atlantic and Pacific fleets.

Not once throughout the march did the cheering of Jack cease. Women and girls that had managed to secure positions next the ropes, that separated crowds from the marchers, heaped him with flowers, threw laurel wreaths over his rifle and in other ways showed him that he is appreciated and liked even if he is only an enlisted man.

The third division was composed of veterans' organizations, militia and semi-military organizations.

The head of the column started from Sansome and Market streets, leading the way out Market to Van Ness, along the west side of Van Ness to Washington, thence countermarching on the east side of Van Ness to Market, thence down to Taylor, where the parade disbanded.

BUILDING INSPECTOR WILL SOON RESIGN

Spencer Will Devote Time to Manufacturing Plant in the City.

W. Irving Spencer, city building inspector, will shortly resign and engage in the manufacture of bolts and nuts in a plant to be erected in Sellwood. Spencer has just returned from the east where he has been negotiating in regard to the factory project and stated today that an establishment costing $85,000 would be erected.

Spencer has been with the city for several years and has made a good record as building inspector. He has increased the efficiency of the office greatly while administering its affairs. Many improvements have been made in the method of inspecting buildings, regulating construction and revising the city building ordinances. At the present time Spencer has been assisting the city council in drafting an ordinance inspecting buildings and building construction in Portland. This measure, which is voluminous, is almost completed and Spencer will finish this part of his work before he leaves the employ of the city.

Inasmuch as Spencer has not yet tendered his resignation or set the time of his departure from the city hall no successor has been thought of. The position under the civil service rules and an examination must be conducted to examine applicants if no waiting list is on file with the commission before a successor can be appointed.
